The City Hall last evening contained a large and appreciative audience which gathered to listen to a concert given by the local Philharmonic Society, assisted by Mr. J. D. A. Tripp, pianist, of Toronto. The latter certainly added much to the pleasure of the evening by his skilful playing. He is able, with apparent ease and gentle touch upon the keys of the instrument, to bring forth sweet melodies. Three times did his name appear upon the programme and he was compelled to respond to that number of encores. Mr. Tripp is certainly an artist at his profession. The programme of the evening consisted of two cantatas, namely, "Fair Ellen," by Max Bruch, and "Gallia," by Charles Gounod, and in addition there were a number of part songs. The vocalists presented a pleasing picture as they took their seats upon the platform, with Mrs. (Col.) Campbell presiding at the piano. Prof. V. P. Hunt, with baton in hand, gave the signal and the opening chorus began, the title being "The Banner of St. George." This was sung with considerable fervor and a well blending of the various voices. Two piano solos by Mr. Tripp followed, and from the loud applause he received they certainly were a delight to all present. Part songs, "The Nightingale" and "Song of the Skylark," were next, rendered by the members, and it was exceptionally well done. A vocal duet was given by Mrs. M. C. Gordon and Miss M. Stork, and both ladies acquitted themselves well, their voices being in good harmony. The cantata "Fair Ellen," was next rendered. This cantata was for chorus, with soprano and baritone solos, which were taken respectively by Miss M. Vermilyea and Mr. Dan A. Cameron. Neither were heard to better advantage by a Belleville audience. The part song, "The River Floweth Strong, My Love," was rendered by the company and it certainly was given well and equally well received. A quartette composed of Mrs. A. G. Parker, Misses M. Wilson and Gertie and Elsie Price, sang "Briar Roses" and "When Love is Kind," in a manner which captivated all, and they were compelled to repeat a portion of it. After two more piano solos had been given by Mr. Tripp, the cantata "Gallia" was rendered. The soprano solos in this number were given by Mrs. A. G. Parker, and that lady not only did credit to the part, but to herself. She sang with ease and sweetness. The choruses also were well given. The singing of the National Anthem brought the pleasing entertainment to a close. Mrs. (Col.) Campbell, as accompanist upon the piano, and Miss Laura Lavoie, as organist, fully sustained their reputations. Those who took part in the programme were as follows:

Sopranos—Mrs. A. G. Parker, Mrs. V. P. Hunt, Miss Vermilyea, Miss Stork, Miss Foley, Miss Tomblin, Miss Adams, Miss Thompson, Miss Berry, Miss Elliott, Miss Lavoie, Miss Campbell, Miss Webster, Miss Crooks, Miss M. Wilson.

Altos—Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. M. C. Gordon, Miss Yeomans, Miss McLean, Miss Embury, Miss G. Price, Miss Lawrence.

Tenors—C. H. Vermilyea, A. G. Parker, D. Price, T. P. Brown, M. C. Gordon, F. B. Hudson, T. Foley, F. E. O'Flynn, W. S. Detlor.

Bass—D. A. Cameron, A. Gillen, E. Henthorn, E. R. Gordon, F. Sprague, W. A. A. Chown, D. Parker, O. A. Marshall.

WANTED IN TORONTO

EDWARD WARDHAUGH ALLEGED TO HAVE BROKEN THE LAW IN THE QUEEN CITY.

A communication was received a few days ago from the Chief of the Toronto police department, asking the police here to be on the lookout for one Edward Wardhaugh. This morning Officer Hayes secured the party and locked him up. He is wanted in the Queen City on the charge of house-breaking and theft. It is alleged that Wardhaugh was a companion of Walter Flagler, who was recently sentenced in Toronto to three years in the penitentiary for house-breaking and theft. The authorities at Toronto were immediately notified of the arrest and an officer arrived here to-day to take him back. Wardhaugh is well-known in this city, where he lived for some years. He is about 28 years of age, and was suspected of robbing a second-hand store in this city some time ago, the parties who lost the property refusing to prosecute.

The Sessions.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM INDICTED FOR PERJURY — OTHER CASES.

Chambers vs. McIlroy.—This case occupied the attention of the court all yesterday and a verdict was not reached until 10 o'clock last night. The plaintiff claimed a commission for disposing of some property belonging to the defendant. The latter disputed the claim, hence the suit. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $50 as a commission and this will carry costs. Mr. McDonald for plaintiff and E. G. Porter, solicitor; Mr. Wm. Cross for defendant, and Mr. S. Masson, solicitor.

The Grand Jury this morning brought in a True Bill against Sylvanus Burnham on the charge of perjury. The accused, on the 6th inst., was before the County Judge and convicted of obtaining some money and an overcoat from Bigelow Bros., of Trenton, under false pretences. At that trial he swore that he was not convicted of perjury at Barrie; that he was not convicted at Stratford of fraud, and had not served a term in the penitentiary. It is alleged that these statements were false and that he committed wilful perjury. In the trial on the date named Provincial Detective Rogers gave evidence in the case and swore positively that Burnham had been convicted of forgery and received a sentence of five years in the penitentiary and was released after serving two years. In 1891 he was convicted at Stratford of fraud and served two years for that offence.

The accused being arraigned pleaded not guilty and stated that he was not ready for trial.

Mr. Anderson, County Attorney, asked that the case be traversed to the next court, and Judge Lazier consented to this being done.

Burnham was then requested to stand up and the County Attorney moved that the sentence of the court be pronounced upon him in the charge of fraud, of which he had been convicted.

Judge Lazier said that owing to the prisoner's age, he being over 60 years old, he could not send him to the Central Prison, which he intended. He then gave him a sentence of nine months at hard labor in the County jail.

Three Months for Wynn.

Onslaugh Wynn, who was convicted of a common assault, was brought up for sentence. His Honor, before pronouncing sentence gave the prisoner some wholesome advice as to giving up the use of liquor, which had caused him this trouble. Wynn was sentenced to three months in jail at hard labor.

The Grand Jury made their presentment, and, after being briefly addressed by His Honor, were discharged.

Grand Jury's Presentment.

Canada,
Province of Ontario,
County of Hastings.

The Grand Jury of our Lord the King report:

We desire to thank Your Honor for the remarks made relative to our duties at this honorable Court, following, as we have, those completed by us at the High Court Sittings just closed, and we feel that the occasion is a fitting one upon which to convey to Your Honor and to the County the sorrow and loss occasioned by the death of the late Anson Gilbert Northrup, who for half a century faithfully performed the duties pertaining to his office as Clerk of the Court, and who always retained the respect and esteem of everybody.

We desire to embody in this report the remarks made by us in our report presented under date of the 22nd day of March, 1905.

We are pleased to be able to congratulate Your Honor upon your continued good health.

All of which we humbly submit.

Dated this 24th day of March, A.D. 1905.

MORDEN BIRD,
Foreman.

This completed the business of the sessions, which were fittingly closed.

WILL NOT ESCAPE TRIAL.

PROSECUTION OF MANITOBA RETURNING OFFICERS WILL PROCEED.

Winnipeg, March 23. — The Attorney-General was interviewed today in reference to the attitude of the department in regard to the prosecution against the returning officers and Liberal organizers for violation of the Franchise Act by the application of the "thin red line." The Attorney-General, in answer to the enquiry what was intended to be done, replied:

"In view of the serious nature of the charges, striking as they do the very foundation of our constitutional liberties, we cannot afford to have hundreds of citizens deprived of their right to vote without having the most thorough public investigation before a judge and jury, and it would only be a justification for further and similar action if the parties were not prosecuted. I have determined to continue until the parties are brought to stand their trial. The investigation must be vigorous and complete; the blame put on the proper shoulders, however unpalatable in some directions it may be. Further charges covering all the names struck off will be immediately laid and proceeded with, and I have no doubt that the public demands that this investigation proceed. We must protect the ballot and right to vote at all costs. We cannot allow technical points to prevent justice being administered, nor can we allow a few men on the Grand Jury to thwart the investigation. You may say instructions have been given to proceed at once."

HONOR FOR A PROMINENT RESIDENT OF STIRLING.

COL. J. EARL HALLIWELL ELECTED GRAND MASTER OF GRAND LODGE OF ROYAL BLACK KNIGHTS OF IRELAND OF EASTERN ONTARIO.

Marmora Herald: Stirling has at least one citizen whose life is not spent in sleep or idleness. If Col. Halliwell had to answer a roll call each day to public and social organizations in which he is active it would consume no little time. He has from boyhood grown up with as much love for social, military and other institutions as a duck has for water. He does not seek for office by any underhand means, but through the merit of doing what is given him to do, and a genial nature has received honors as a just reward. In his case it is fulfilling the command "Honor to whom honor is due."

At Ottawa on 14th inst. he was elected Grand Master of the Royal Black Knights of Ireland of Eastern Ontario. The following day he was unanimously promoted from Deputy to the Grand Master's chair of the Grand Loyal Orange Lodge of Eastern Ontario. His father was a very prominent Orangeman, having been Grand Chaplain of Grand Orange Lodge of British America for several years until his death. In 1894 he was elected Supreme Chaplain at Triennial Council, the highest lodge in the world. The Colonel has been County Secretary of County Orange Lodge for many years.

Masonry is another order in which he takes a great interest. He is a member of the Master Masons, Royal Arch and Knights Templar. He is at the present time D.D.G.M. of Prince Edward and Past Grand Supt. of Prince Edward District in the Royal Arch. He is a member of the Executive of the Grand Chapter of Canada.

A.O.U.W. also claims his attention He is Past Grand Overseer and was D.D.G.M. for three years. He is Financier of Stirling Lodge.

He is Past Noble Grand of I.O.O.F. and member of Oddfellows' Encampment and Oriental Order of Humility and Perfection. Is a Forester also.

In public matters the Colonel has done his duty. He is ex-Reeve of Stirling, was County Councillor many years and is now Clerk of the village. He is a graduate and M.A. of Trinity University, and a member of the Council of that University.

In church also he is active. He has been S. S. Supt. and Church Warden for many years in Stirling. He is lay representative to Synod, member of Executive Committee for Synod of Ontario, member of Mission Board of Ontario and representative of Synod to Provincial Synod.

Both on his father's and mother's side the families have been prominent in army and navy of England. It is no wonder that the subject of this sketch felt the glow of the old fighting blood of the Saxon. From boyhood he has been an enthusiastic militia man, and has seen active service in the Northwest rebellion. He rose from Junior Ensign to Commanding Officer of 15th Regiment, which office he now holds. He has the long service decoration, having been for twenty consecutive years in service as qualified commissioned officer, and is one still. He wears a medal for Northwest service, where he was wounded at Batoche with the Midland Batallion.

Colonel Halliwell is a credit to his town and country and only needs a term or two in Parliament to round out a pretty full list of honors, of which he has been well deserving.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTES.

The hockey season is about over, and the sport-lovers are wondering if Belleville will have a rink next winter. Many think that a good, up-to-date rink would pay well.

John Anderson, one of the New York Americans' heavy hitters, now commands the attention of all baseball fans. He claims to have discovered a way to swat the ball that will fool the fielders just as effectually as Chesbro deceives the batter with his spit ball. The "tangent" he calls it. Anderson declares he has developed a method of putting an "English" on the ball when he hits it that will cause it to deflect from its true course in a similar manner to a billiard ball that has been 'Englished' by a player.

An enormous cricket score was made by Richmond second eleven against the University second recently at Melbourne, Australia. Richmond scored 867 runs, dismissing their opponents for 182 and 76, thus winning by an innings and 609 runs. The chief scorers got 239, 162, 117 and 106.

Paul Pons, the great French wrestler, died a few days ago in Berlin. Pons was champion of the world until his defeat by Hackenschmidt. In the international wrestling tournaments of Europe Pons won the golden belt and the championship title three times, the last one only a few months ago at the Folies Bergeres, Paris. Pons was 41 years old at the time of his death.

CHECKERS.

American Champion Beaten.

Boston, Mass., March 23.—To-day's play in the international checker tournament resulted in the British visitors further increasing their lead over their American hosts. Hill scored the only two wins made by the Americans to-day, but in the evening series he was defeated once by Hynd.

The feature was the defeat of Barker, the American champion, by Ferrie, former world's champion, this afternoon. Ferrie led Barker into a trap, and when the American had once snugly ensconced himself in what appeared an impregnable position, the Briton closed the trap and took the game.

Eighth day's score: British, 6; Americans, 2; drawn, 32. Total score; British, 57; Americans, 28; drawn, 235.

A GREAT LAWYER'S OPINION.

MR. CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON, K. C., GIVES HIS OPINION OF THE AUTONOMY BILL.

Dr. Sproule, in the House of Commons yesterday, read the following opinion from Mr. Christopher Robinson, K.C., on the school clauses of the Autonomy Bill:

"The right of the Dominion Parliament to impose restrictions upon the provinces about to be formed in dealing with the subject of education and Separate schools is, I think, not beyond question. This would require more consideration than I have yet been able to give to it, and must ultimately be settled by judicial decision. I am asked, however, whether Parliament is constitutionally bound to impose any such restriction, or whether it exists otherwise, and I am of opinion in the negative. It must be borne in mind that I am concerned only with the the question of legal obligation; what Parliament ought to do or should do in the exercise of any power which they may possess is not within the province of counsel.

"Such a restriction, I apprehend, must exist or may be imposed, if at all, under the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, and on the ground of their application to the provinces now to be formed. If that section applies, it would seem to require no enactment of our Parliament to give it effect, and, if not, no such enactment, so far as I am aware, is otherwise made necessary.

"Upon the whole, I am of opinion that section 93 does not apply to the provinces now about to be established. Its provisions would appear to me to be intended for and confined to the then provinces and to the union formed in 1867. There is not in any part of the Northwest Territories, as a province, any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools possessed by any class of persons, created by the province or existing at such union, and a right subsequently established by the Dominion in the part now about to be made a province does not appear to me to come within the enactment."

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

Hill was accused of obtaining goods by false pretences from S. F. McKinnon & Co. The other charges against him, in which John Macdonald & Co., Gordon, Mackay & Co., and the Merchants Dyeing and Finishing Co. are the complainants, were traversed to the next sessions. Hill was admitted to bail, himself in $4,000 and two others in $2,000 each. Judge Winchester will pass sentence on Wednesday. Mrs. Hill, who was in court, broke down completely when the verdict was announced. Hill's counsel, I. A. Robinson, will ask for a reserve case.

Separate Church and State.

Paris, March 24.—The Chamber of Deputies yesterday continued the debate on the bill providing for the separation of church and state. M. Deschanel (Republican), former president of the House, declared the debate was the most important since the revolution, as it concerned the abolition of a religious regime which had existed for five centuries. The interference of religion with politics had become intolerable, while the interference of the state with questions of conscience was equally odious. Therefore, the time had come to place each upon a separate and independent basis.

One provision is to allow the insured to change the beneficiary except where the financial consideration has passed; another is to provide that if the contract is made in New Brunswick, action to enforce it may be taken in this Province, no matter where the head office of the company is. Another is to make the application no longer a part of the contract, and another that statements in the application, if not corrected, shall not void the policy unless the courts hold they are material to the contract. It is intended the bill shall apply to the benefit societies as well as regular companies. It met with some opposition in the preliminary debate.

THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

Moved By Messrs. Hoyle and Downey in the Legislature.

Mr. Hoyle Makes It Clear That There Will Be No Politics in Government Control of the Temiskaming Railway—Mr. Downey Acquits Himself Well With Restricted Subject—Speakers to Follow.

Toronto, March 24.—The galleries of the Legislature were again crowded yesterday and many spectators had seats on the floor, showing that the public interest in the change of Government has not died down. Nearly all the members were in their seats and they soon accommodated themselves to the change from left to right and right to left. Mr. Whitney looked just as comfortable in the Premier's chair as he did when he was across the floor, and Mr. Harcourt appeared to be pleased with the view of the chamber obtained from the left of the Speaker.

Movers of the Address.

Mr. Hoyle, of North Ontario, and Mr. Downey, of South Wellington, were the orators selected to move and second the address to the Lieutenant-Governor, thanking him for his speech. Both acquitted themselves well. There was lacking in their speeches exultation over a badly whipped foe, but they read in the returns some lessons which they carried to the opposite side, and even accepted for the victors. The various items of the speech were discussed, and both were able to show that the Government, though new to the responsibilities of office, had taken hold in a business-like way, determined to carry out the principles advocated by them in opposition.

Mr. Hoyle made a strong point of his belief in the principle of public ownership. He showed that it was the policy of the Government to free the administration of the Temiskaming Railway as much as possible from partisan control, and he argued that if the road was run in the interests of the people, and not of the politicians, public ownership would pay.

Mr. Downey was under considerable restraint, confined to the narrow limits of the speech from the Throne, but he made the most of the subjects mentioned in the Government program. He was most eloquent in describing the vast resources of Northern Ontario.

Speakers to Come.

T. H. Preston moved the adjournment of the debate, which will be continued on Tuesday. To-day's session, it is expected, will not last more than ten minutes, and only formal matters will be taken up. The Government speakers on the address in order of selection are T. W. McGarry, of South Renfrew, Dr. Lewis, of Dufferin, Dr. Smellie, of Fort William, and Mr. Gamey. Mr. Harcourt said yesterday it was not the intention of the Opposition to prolong the debate, and that after Mr. Preston he (Mr. Harcourt) would probably close the argument on that side.

After the adjournment of the debate yesterday, the Provincial Treasurer introduced some resolutions, and the House went into committee on interim estimates, amounting to about $600,000. While the House was in committee, J. B. Lucas was in the chair.

In reply to Mr. Harcourt, the Premier said the committees would be formed on Tuesday, and Hon. Col. Matheson said the public accounts would probably be down next week.

Whips For the Government.

The first Conservative caucus was held yesterday morning. Major Hugh Clark presided. Dr. R. F. Preston, of North Lanark, was chosen chief whip and A. A. Mahaffy, of Muskoka, junior whip.

T. H. Preston, of Brantford, has given notice of two bills, one favoring the stamping of prison-made goods, the other amending the Municipal Act by reducing the property qualifications of mayors in cities and towns from $1,000 to $500 freehold and from $2,000 to $1,000 leasehold.

Spotted Fever Epidemic.

Dr. Hodgetts has received a report that an epidemic of spotted fever has been discovered in a western town. The technical name for this disease is cerebro-spinal meningitis.

A deputation from Halleybury will wait on the Government to-day to ask for some changes in the mining laws.

A meeting of the Railway Taxation Commission will be held this week, when it is probable the final draft of the report will be made.

Negotiations are now in progress between the Province and the Dominion respecting the respective responsibilities of each in regard to the Indians north of the height of land and east of Lake Superior.

Quebec Cabinet Sworn.

Quebec, March 24.—The Provincial Cabinet has been reorganized as follows: Hon. Lomer Gouin, Prime Minister and Attorney-General; Hon. Adelard Turgeon, Minister of Lands, Forests and Fisheries; Hon. J. C. McCorkill, Provincial Treasurer; Hon. Jules Allard, Minister of Colonization and Public Works; Hon. R. Roy, Provincial Secretary; Hon. W. A. Weir, Minister without portfolio; Hon. H. Archambault will remain as President of the Legislative Council. The new Ministers were sworn in yesterday morning. The Minister of Agriculture will not be appointed before to-day.

Both Bylaws Carry.

Brockville, March 24.—Yesterday the ratepayers of Brockville voted on two money bylaws, one to authorize the council to lend $30,000 to the Canada Carriage Co. to assist in rebuilding the works destroyed by fire a few months ago; and the other to raise $1,000 with which to buy land for a site for the D. H. Burrell Co. of Little Falls, N. Y., which proposes erecting a factory here for the manufacture of dairy supplies. Both bylaws were adopted by large majorities over and above the required number.

Postponed One Year.

London, March 24.—Sir Henry Irving's American-Canadian tour has been postponed for one year. The reason is that Sir Henry's doctors advise that he should not have so long a tour at present. His health is, however, much improved.

Ex-Mayor Seeks Re-Instatement.

Toronto, March 25.—Major Goodwin, of Steelton, a suburb of Saute Ste. Marie, does not want to be unseated. He was "reported" in connection with the Soo election trial and unseated by the local judge. He is appealing at Osgoode Hall on the ground that he was not proven guilty, that the judge exceeded his jurisdiction, and that the offence anyway did not merit disqualification.

Death From Skipping.

Chatham, March 25.—The first "skipping" death of the season occurred here yesterday when little Fred Robinson, the 12-year-old son of ex-Ald. Henry Robinson, died. A week ago Fred was skipping steadily for a couple of hours, and afterwards complained of feeling unwell. The next day he was sick in bed, suffering from an attack of peritonitis, and passed away yesterday.

Insane After Jump.

St. Thomas, March 25.—While a westbound Wabash train was running rapidly between Aylmer and this city Thursday evening, an Italian, one of a number on their way to Denver, jumped from the train. He was found later wandering about near where he jumped. He was brought to this city severely injured and insane.

CURES CATARRH

Japanese Catarrh Cure Never Fails

Lots of remedies relieve catarrh for a time, because they are full of cocaine and other dangerous narcotics. These drugs deaden the nerves and seem to make one feel better. But stop the treatment and catarrh returns worse than ever. Japanese Catarrh Cure is a complete, permanent cure. It instantly kills the germs of catarrh, allays all inflammation, clears the head, stops the hawking and spitting, takes away headaches, and removes every trace of the disease. Japanese Catarrh Cure is a balmy, aromatic pomade—pleasant to use, and marvelous in its healing, soothing powers.

Mrs. Wilson, principal of the Government Home, Elkhorn, says:—"Japanese Catarrh Cure has given wonderful results on every case tried, having cured some very aggravated cases in the home."

Russians Are Outflanked.

Occupy Positions 34 Miles From Gunshu Lake.

Resumption of Hostilities on a Grand Scale and an Important Battle Improbable Inside of Three Months—Women and Children Reported as Leaving Harbin—Peace Prospects Assuming a More Definite and Tangible Aspect.

St. Petersburg, March 25.—The Russian rearguard is now occupying a line of fairly strong natural positions, thirty-four miles south of Gunshu Pass, the centre being the railroad village of Sipinghai, and the flanks covering the roads on either side, which apparently it is the intention to defend long enough to force the Japanese to show their hands. The Russians may, however, have been outflanked and have no intention of making a serious stand, especially as all the correspondents continue to report rumors of wide turning operations on both flanks, indicating a probable basis in fact. The correspondents believe a resumption of hostilities on a grand scale and an important battle are improbable inside of three months.

Fleeing From Harbin.

Gunshu Pass, Manchuria, (108 miles north of Tie Pass), March 25.—The women and children are reported to be leaving Harbin and the business houses are closing. The stationary hospitals are being moved back and the entire railroad east and south of Tsitsihar is being prepared for the next stage of the war.

The conviction exists that Gen. Kuroki is now directed toward the northeast for the investment of Vladivostock, changing his base for that purpose to Gensen. While the Manchurian Railway is employed to supply the main army in its advance on Harbin, the Japanese seem still partial to the plan of keeping close to their sea base, and instead of following the Russians some of the military experts are of the opinion that the Japanese may relieve the pressure upon Gen. Linevitch, and thus induce him to concentrate in the region between Santoupu and Tie Pass for another battle.

On to Vladivostock.

Port Said, March 25.—Admiral Nebogatoff's division of the Russian second Pacific squadron, consisting of a battleship, four cruisers and four transports, arrived here yesterday. The vessels are not coaling and are only taking moderate supplies on board. The transports are heavily laden with stores. The division, which is said to be bound for Jibutil and Vladivostock will probably proceed to-day.

PEACE STEPS BY RUSSIA.

Will Deal Directly Through French Minister at Tokio.

Paris, March 25.—The prospects of peace between Russia and Japan assumed a more definite and almost a tangible aspect yesterday as the result of the announcement of the resumption of negotiations for a Russian loan.

Coupled with the announcement of the resumption of the loan negotiations came a strong intimation from official and diplomatic quarters that steps looking toward peace had been definitely taken by Russia. The foreign office declined to confirm a report that France was likely to be the intermediary, but the diplomats who are actively interested for the first time gave credit to the statement that Russia decided to seek peace. It was said in these quarters that Russia would deal directly with Tokio, through the French minister who has charge of the Russian interests there.

Russia's chief pre-occupation is said to be avoidance of having peace plans arouse the animosity of the powerful war element at home. The receipt of an official despatch at St. Petersburg on March 20, saying that the Japanese were approaching Vladivostock, is said to have induced the determination to seek a pacific solution. On the other hand, it is insisted that Japanese proximity to Vladivostock promises to be a chief obstacle in the way of peace, as diplomats conversant with the situation say that Japan will seek to avert peace until she possesses Russia's only outlet to the Pacific coast.

The Campaign For Peace.

St. Petersburg, March 25.—The papers are supporting the campaign for peace and are beginning to print quite openly the history of the intrigues in the Far East for the protection of private interests, devoting special attention to M. Bezobrazoff's connection with the Yalu timber concessions. The publications include a secret memorandum of Gen. Kuropatkin pointing out that war would be inevitable if Russian interests were extended into Corea. The necessity for increased taxation to meet the expenses of the war is recognized, and the Minister of Finance has submitted projects to the Council of the Empire, including taxes on beer, matches, etc., and a graduated tax on the salaries of Government officials, beginning with 1 per cent. on salaries of over $300, which altogether will realize about $11,000,000. There is also a proposition for a general income tax, which undoubtedly would prove the most popular form of raising money, as it would bear heaviest on those able to pay.

Newfoundland Retaliates.

St. John's, Nfld., March 25.—The Newfoundland Government has ordered the customs collectors throughout the island to refuse American fishing vessels licenses to procure bait in colonial waters, because the United States Senate burked the Bond-Hay treaty.

MR. HARCOURT IS KIND

Leader Promises That the Opposition Will Be Good.

Pleasant Interchanges of Persiflage Between the Premier and Mr. Harcourt—Opposition Will Not Attempt to Drive the Government Out During This Session at Least—Notices of Inquiry—A Haileybury Deputation.

Toronto, March 25.—Fifteen minutes sufficed to dispose of all the business before the Legislature yesterday. As soon as the orders of the day were called, Mr. Harcourt, leader of the Opposition, asked the Premier to announce his intentions regarding the appointment of a committee to strike the standing committees. Mr. Harcourt predicted a short session. There had been sessions as short as seven weeks, but the average was about nine weeks, and this time he thought the bulk of the legislation would have reference to private bills.

The leader of the Opposition promised that he and his colleagues would not embarrass the Government.

Mr. Foy is Grateful.

"Oh, thank you!" remarked Hon. J. J. Foy.

Mr. Harcourt—Strong as the Opposition were in numbers they would not attempt to give the Government trouble. Out of the twenty-eight members besides himself, twenty-seven were excellent debaters, and the twenty-eighth, Mr. Graham, of Brockville, had assured him that he would dip in occasionally.

Growing serious, Mr. Harcourt said he did not expect that the Government would be called upon to present a heavy bill this session, but he urged that the committees be struck, so that they could get to business with as little delay as posible.

Premier Cites Precedent.

Replying to Mr. Harcourt, the Premier said he had been the House fifteen years, and this was the first time he had known his honorable friend to be anxious to advance the work of the session at this particular stage. He had always found that it was impossible to get down to business earlier than ten days from the opening. At one time, in the exuberance of his youth, Mr. Whitney had got up in the House and suggested that a way ought to be found to avoid delay during the early part of the session, and that Mr. Harcourt had, quite properly, instructed him on the point. Mr. Whitney observed that there was not a private bill ready, and if the committee had been organized it would have been impossible to do anything for two weeks. However, if he had known that Mr. Harcourt was so anxious he might have asked the whips of both sides to come together and arrange the names.

Quips by the Leaders.

He thought there were reasons why the session should not be unduly prolonged, and he was glad the Opposition would expedite the business before the House. In conclusion, Mr. Whitney expressed the hope that the Opposition would "be to our faults a little blind," and that the session would be satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. Harcourt added to the quotation: "And to his virtues (if we can discover them) very kind."

The Premier then moved the adjournment.

Will Dismiss Overseers.

Hon. Dr. Reaume said yesterday that the district fishery overseers had been dismissed and their places would not be filled. The fishery inspectors would also be dismissed and a new lot appointed under a new system of supervision.

Notices of Enquiry.

Mr. Harcourt has given notice of some questions he will ask the Government. He will ask if it is the intention of the Government to amend the act respecting fermented and spirituous liquors, and he will also ask for a return of correspondence between the late Government and the federal authorities in reference to the expansion of Ontario's boundaries.

C. N. Smith (Sault Ste. Marie) will ask if the Government has appointed a financial expert or auditor not a resident of Canada, and, if so, who is he?

Haileybury Deputation.

A deputation from Haileybury and other New Ontario points waited upon the Government yesterday morning and were heard by Hon. Messrs Whitney, Foy and Hanna. Their request was for protection for the private prospector against the speculator, and the machinations of the "blanket claim" men. They asked that the Temiskaming district be declared a "mining district," enabling it to come under regulations that would prevent these abuses. Strict enforcement of the regulations, they held, was necessary for the protection of the prospector. The Government promised early consideration.

Jail for New Liskeard.

Hon. Dr. Reaume received a deputation from New Liskeard asking for a jail and court house. The Minister promised consideration. He will visit New Liskeard at the close of the session, and decide afterwards.

A Centre Bruce deputation asked Hon. Dr. Pyne to reduce the salaries of school inspectors to the former figure of $4 per school, and that the act in reference to students from outside the country attending the Collegiate Institute should be changed to relieve the municipality from liability.

John Jennings has been appointed secretary to the leader of the Opposition.

All the members of the Legislature have signed the roll except Messrs. Ross, Kennedy and Bowman, Oppositionists. There were just twelve Opposition members in the House yesterday.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

We don't put Scott's Emulsion in the class of advertised cure-alls; it doesn't belong there. We hardly like to use the word "cure" at all, but we are bound to say that it can be used for a great many troubles with great satisfaction. Its special function is to repair the waste of the body when the ordinary food does not nourish, and this means that it is useful in many cases which are indicated by wasting.

We'll send you a sample free.

Andrew Miscampbell Very Ill.

Toronto, March 25.—Andrew Miscampbell, Provincial organizer for the Conservative party, is lying at his home on Close avenue at the point of death. For the past five weeks he has been ill with typhoid fever, and yesterday took a very serious turn, which became worse as night approached. Four doctors were called in consultation during the afternoon, and the opinion prevailed that should he live until this morning the crisis would be past and there would be some slight hope for his recovery.

Dies of Heart Failure.

Guelph, March 25.—John McCorkindale, secretary of Guelph Township Council and secretary of the Guelph Fat Stock Club, died suddenly yesterday morning from heart failure.

300,000 PLAGUE VICTIMS.

India's Death List Exceeds That of War in Far East.

London, March 25.—Replying to questions in the House of Commons last night, Mr. Brodrick, Secretary of State for India, said that the latest figures on the plague in India showed that for the four weeks ending February 28, in the Bombay Presidency there were 13,475 deaths, and that for the four weeks ending March 11 in the rest of India there were 123,500 deaths.

The total number of deaths from the plague in the Bombay Presidency from January 1 to February 28 were 28,721, and in the rest of India from January 1 to March 11, 318,178.

Mr. Brodrick said he had communicated with the Viceroy of India looking to a remedy for this deplorable loss of life, and that it had been decided to send out a scientific expedition to investigate the causes. The expedition will start immediately.

DON'T WATCH BOYS.

Governor Maximovitch Withdraws Patrols From the Schools.

Warsaw, March 25.—The strikers in the coal and iron districts of Sosnovice and Dombrova have ended at last, the workmen having resumed their labor yesterday morning. The peasant agitation continues, but only as a sporadic movement, controlled by Socialist agitators, who have been unable thus far to impress the peasants with their view of the necessity of a strike. M. Maximovitch, the new Governor-General, has withdrawn the patrols from the schools, being of the opinion that it is undignified to employ soldiers to watch school boys.

CAUGHT BY THE CRY.

The Way an Australian Bandit Was Trapped In London.

"Coo-e-e" is the curious cry that was one of the signals of the native blacks of Australia. The cry was speedily adopted by the invading whites. The final "e" is a very high note, a sort of prolonged screech that resounds for long distances through the bush and thus enables separated persons to ascertain their relative positions. On one notable occasion this peculiar cry was heard in London. A daring bushranger made his appearance one morning in front of a bank in Ballarat and coolly posted a notice on the door to the effect that the place would be closed for an hour.

Entering, he terrorized the officials with his revolver and got clear away with $30,000. Some time afterward the authorities received information that the man had been seen in London. One day a detective thought he espied his man in the Strand; but, not being quite sure, he hit upon an expedient. He uttered a piercing "Coo-e-e."

Passersby stood fixed in astonishment, but the Australian, acting on the spur of the moment and recognizing the familiar sound, hastened to the person who uttered it. He was promptly arrested and was taken back to Australia.

POWER OF PURPOSE.

Conceive Your Ambition Clearly and Follow It Courageously.

We all can measure the outward triumph of a man's life, but we rarely measure the forces out of which the triumph sprang. Men suddenly emerge into the blaze of fame, and then the world wakes up and wonders how it has all happened. There is no such thing as luck in any world over which God presides. What, then, is the secret? It is purpose. The great victories which men praise are always won first of all in a man's own soul. The great men who stamp themselves ineffaceably on the ages are always the men who are capable of conceiving a purpose clearly and of following it courageously through evil and good report. You may sweep aside as relatively trivial all questions of the range of their gifts, the scope of their intellectual life. The great thing which you have to reckon with is the immense strength and heroic persistency of their purpose.—W. J. Dawson.

Taste and Touch.

Touch, Dr. Andrew Wilson has reminded us, is probably the oldest of our senses. It is also, we may add, the most active where taste has always been assumed to be paramount—at the dinner table. It is a fact overlooked that we like what we like less because we taste it than because we feel it. What is there wonderful in the taste of your perfect, your ripe potato? Nothing or little. But, ah, the feeling! What have the resistance of bread, the sudden coolness of butter, the tenderness of asparagus, the crispness of biscuit, to do with taste? Something almost negligible.—London Chronicle.

A Jap World's Fair.

Japan thinks seriously of inviting all creation to come to a world's fair and incidentally look her over. With the energy and ingenuity of the Japs, it would seem feasible to cut the little island loose from its moorings and float it around the world for exhibition at enormously profitable rates.

A REMARKABLE STORY

WOMAN TELLS OF HER FOURTEEN YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Mrs. H. J. Rehorn.

From Buffalo, N. Y., comes a startling story, illustrating how much suffering a woman can bear and yet live.

Mrs. H. J. Rehorn, 189 Landon St., that city, says: "Soon after the birth of my first child, 14 years ago, constipation became troublesome, and the various pills and medicines I used would give temporary relief, but gradually they seemed to lose their influence and the condition became worse. I must have used fully 50 different remedies.

"At times I would have no relish for food, and what I did eat would distress my stomach. Gas would form and rise, headache and restless sleep, bearing-down pain, backache, and gradually I began to recognize the loss of strength, easily tired, and never feeling fully rested.

"My husband brought me home a bottle of a new medicine called Anti-Pill and from the first I began to improve. My appetite was better and what I ate did not make me feel uncomfortable. Anti-Pill is mild and gentle in its action, and yet it cured my terribly obstinate constipation and made me feel so well."

Every druggist sells this wonderful Anti-Pill that cured Mrs. Rehorn.

Recommended and sold by J. S. McKeown.

There are times when the mysteries of life seem greater than the mystery of death.

Daily Intelligencer.

THE VOICE OF THE WEST.

The Winnipeg Tribune (Independent) says that there is only one voice from the press of the Territories, apart from the absolutely personal organs of the members of Parliament supporting the Government, on the autonomy question; and it quotes numerous journals in support of this statement. The protests against interference with provincial rights are as emphatic as the English language permits.

The Saskatoon Phoenix says:

"Throughout the west the towns and cities are holding public meetings on the all important subject, the Separate School clause in the Autonomy Bill, and resolutions are being freely drafted following these discussions. All are emphatic in denunciation of the arbitrary nature of the clause and protest vigorously with no uncertain sound. The question is not one of party. It is a national one. It is characterized as an invasion of Provincial rights, since the spirit and principle of confederation involve the right of every Province to control its own educational affairs. The clause is a violation of the principle of separation of church and state, a principle we hold inviolate. Federal authorities have no right to dictate in the slightest degree as to what our educational system shall be."

The Ranching News, of Maple Creek, says:

"The Minister of the Interior has resigned his portfolio and rumors are rife that Mr. Walter Scott will succeed him. Probably the latter gentleman will have no difficulty in supporting the Autonomy Bill with its objectionable Separate School clause and the unsatisfactory land question clauses. But the west, and especially Mr. Scott's constituency, will not allow their representative to take a position so inconsistent with their desires and will protest in a practical manner when he presents himself for endorsement.

"The Winnipeg Free Press talks of a compromise — a compromise which will satisfy the western members and also Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

"There can be no compromise on the subject. Either Separate Schools are to be established or they are not."

And so it is right through to the Pacific Coast. The Victoria, B. C., Colonist comments as follows:

"There can be no compromise at Ottawa on the question of Separate Schools in the Northwest Territories. No modifications or qualifications of the clauses introduced into the bill for provincial autonomy by Sir Wilfrid Laurier will meet the constitutional requirements.

"The situation demands that the Dominion should keep its hands off entirely.

"It may be said that this is a matter that affects the Northwest Territories only, and is, therefore, of a secondary interest to the people of the other Provinces. Not so. It involves a principle of equal interest to the people of all the Provinces. It is a Dominion matter so long as it is being discussed in the Dominion Parliament.

"Nor does it involve a discussion as to whether Separate Schools are right or wrong. That is an entirely different matter. A man who is an ardent supporter of Separate Schools can logically take as strong a ground on the question of the interference of the Dominion as can their bitterest opponent. In fact, Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, admittedly a firm adherent of the principle opposed, and we may assume conscientiously opposed, the measures for remedial legislation in Manitoba, introduced by the Liberal-Conservative Government."

Mr. Sifton's personal organ this morning, adds the Tribune, again makes it very plain where the ex-Minister stands. He is for a 'compromise" so strongly opposed by the Territorial press and by everybody that has declared itself for the freedom of the new Provinces. The exact words of Mr. Sifton's organ are:

"The only clause upon which the ('Liberal') party can unite is one that goes not an inch beyond leaving the privileges of the minority precisely what they are, no more, no less. Behind such a provision powerful arguments can be massed —arguments that in the last analysis may well prove themselves incontrovertible."

This quotation from the Free Press makes it appear that Mr. Sifton is very far from sound on the autonomy question, and looks as though he were prepared to accept a compromise to which Sir Wilfrid might very readily agree. It has been said that Mr. Sifton resigned for other reasons than his opposition to Sir Wilfrid's "school clauses." Mr. Sifton has stoutly denied this report, but some color is surely given to it seeing that his newspaper organ is so ready to accept a compromise which would completely annul the constitutional right of the new Provinces to have autonomy in the matter of Education. The question now must be, why did Mr. Sifton resign?

Since the above was in type we have learned that Mr. Sifton has swallowed the obnoxious bill, body and bones. To be sure a "compromise" sauce has been added to the dish, but that will hardly suit the sturdy outspoken people of the West. It now remains to be seen what they will say to Mr. Sifton after his display of spineless inconsistency.

The Board of Trade has gone after the free bay bridge question in the proper style, and it seems reasonably certain that the matter will be brought to a successful issue. The figures given last night by parties who have studied the question are eloquent. The matter of bridge toll is quite a serious one with many farmers. With that eliminated, it is then, with them, only a choice between a first-class market and a medium market; between city stores, unexcelled between Toronto and Montreal, and country stores. It will not take any wide-awake farmer long to make up his mind which place to go to, when the matter of extra expense is cut out.

The Board of Trade, and especially the energetic committee to whom the matters were entrusted, are to be congratulated on the way they have taken hold of a live question, which means a great deal to Belleville. The matter should receive the earnest attention and support of all classes of our citizens.

SHOULD BE STOPPED.

(Peterboro Review.)

Complaints are being made in regard to the practice of leaving samples of pills, soap, medicine etc., at the various doorways in town. There is danger of small children picking up the packages, and, not being aware of their nature, devouring some of the contents in mistake for candy or gum Two or three narrow escapes have been reported where the children were in the act of sampling some pills. The practice, if not checked, may lead to grave consequences.

AN OLD JOKE REVAMPED.

(Kingston Whig.)

A Belleville youth took his best girl to church last Sunday evening, and stopping at the end of one of the back pews turned to the usher and said: "I guess we can squeeze in here." "Yes," said the usher, with a subdued smile, "I guess you can, but it would be better for all concerned to wait until you get home."

Japan has just borrowed a hundred and fifty million dollars at the remarkably low rate of 4 1-2 per cent. from which it may be judged that success in war has had a beneficial effect on Japan's credit. Half the loan will be taken in New York. Russia can't get a soul to lend her a dollar on any terms. The above two facts, put together, should be the means of finally making Russia decide for peace. With Japan to do the fighting and Britain and America to supply the sinews of war. Russia had better make the best terms possible, or the time may soon come when she will have nothing to say about the making.

The attitude of the Toronto Globe at present must be exceedingly painful to its readers, inasmuch as its course at the present time is one of the most curious mixtures of bigoted partisanship wrestling with a desire to at least appear independent that has been exhibited in Canadian journalism in many a long year. THE JOY OF SPRING.

(The Khan.)

Nothing tickles me more than the fact that the coonskin coat will soon disappear.

In a week or two they will have to take off their coonskin coats.

And with the first breath of real spring the coonskin coat will take a rest.

The man in the coonskin coat is a perfect gentleman — he takes our paper, and I heard him say on the market the other day that it was all right.

But he has got to shed his coonskin coat.

I wonder where they put their coonskin coats in the summer time?

I had a buffalo coat one time in Winnipeg, and I kept it all summer in a disused whiskey barrel. (I was so advised by experts).

When I took it out and put it on I was debarred from good society.

Everybody fled from me.

After all it's hard to know what to do.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

At noon yesterday the rear-guard of the retreating Russian forces had reached Spinghai, 74 miles north of Tieling, where they have temporarily halted. The Japanese are advancing along the line of railway and on both flanks rapidly, and are not likely to give the Russians an opportunity of resting very long. At Changchun there is a branch of the Sungari River, across which is the great bridge which it was the object of both armies to reach first. The Russians have it, however, and may hold back part of the Japanese force for a time there.

On the west of the railway, though, a Japanese army is advancing in a northwesterly direction, paying no attention to the Russians, but endeavoring to get across the Nanni River and cut the railway, and intercept the Russians should they abandon Harbin and retreat westerly into Siberia, which it is possibly their intention to do. Most of the military critics think that the railway on both sides of Harbin is bound to be cut, and in that case Vladivostok must be prepared for a long siege.

That the Russians have considered this eventuality may be gathered from the fact that food and ammunition for two years is said to have been stored there, and that all the women have been ordered to leave. Civilians are already deserting Harbin.

East of the railway line a Japanese army is marching on Kirin, and another army is proceeding in the direction of Vladivostok. This fifth army, as it is termed, is reported to consist of three divisions, numbering 140,000 men. They were landed in Corea some time ago.

Much stress is being laid on the food question as one that is likely to embarrass the Russian commander, and if the destruction and loss of stores at Mikden and Tieling has been on as vast a scale as described it probably will, but only until the opening of navigation on the Amur and the Sungari at the end of April. Since the closing of those rivers by ice last autumn enormous stores of grain have been collecting along the Amur between Blagovestchensk and the mouth of the Sungari River, and these supplies are only awaiting release from the winter to be transported by steamers to the mills at Harbin. Large quantities have also been collected at Khabarovsk, principally for the supply of the Vladivostok garrison. The total quantity, of which an estimate was made last January, would be sufficient to supply bread for more than half a million men during the rest of the year.

In the meantime, persistent peace rumors are in the air, and the white-winged angel may before long spread her wings over Manchuria. Let us hope so.

TROTTING.

Lady Lou is in Good Shape.

Reports from California are to the effect that Lou Dillon is wintering grandly. The two-minute mare has now been at San Jose, in charge of Budd Doble, for about six weeks, having been shipped from Memphis early in December. The harness queen passed last winter at the Memphis driving park. When her work began in the spring she was apparently in superb health and spirits, but it is an old story how she began to show that all was not right with her early in July, while her second collapse in the cup race at Memphis in October proved that she had never really been herself all the season. The reason for this can only be guessed and a thousand guesses have been made. But the urgency of the claims that the climate change—never before in her life had Lou wintered outside her native California—had been detrimental caused Mr. Billings to defer to them and send her back there to stay until next May. She is also being wintered quite differently, otherwise. A year ago, after a few weeks of gradual "unwinding" after her defeat of Major Delmar in the cup race, and her two miles in 1.58 1-2 to sulky and 2.00 to wagon, she was thrown entirely out of training and ran loose in a paddock, roughing it during the day for the best part of a couple of months or more. Doble has not pursued this course with her. He is jogging her every day, and she is not to be completely let up at all.

NOBILITY OF TREES.

A Tribute to the Majesty of the Mighty Oak.

Directly in my path stood an ancient swamp white oak, the greatest tree, I think, that I have ever seen. It was not the highest nor the largest round, perhaps, but individually, spiritually, the greatest. Hoary, hollow and broken limbed, his huge bole seemed encircled with the centuries, and in this green and grizzled top all the winds of heaven had some time come.

One could worship in the presence of such a tree as easily as in the shadow of a vast cathedral. Indeed, what is there built with hands that has the dignity, the majesty, the dignity, of life? And what life was here! Life whose beginnings lay so far back that I could no more reckon the years than I could count the atoms it had builded into this majestic form.

Looking down upon him from twice his height loomed a tulip poplar, clean, bolled for thirty feet and in the top all green and gold with blossoms. It was a resplendent thing beside the oak, yet how unmistakably the gnarled old monarch wore the crown! His girth more than balanced the poplar's great height, and, as for blossoms, nature knows the beauty of strength and inward majesty and has pinned no boutonniere upon the oak.—Dallas Lore Sharp in National Magazine.

Superfluous Hair

Removed by the New Principle,

De Miracle

It is better than electricity, because it does not scar or produce a new growth. Better than X-ray, because it does not burn, scar or paralyze the tissues under the skin. Better than depilatories, because it is not poisonous; therefore it will not cause blood poisoning, or produce eczema, which is so common with depilatories, nor does it break off the hair, thereby increasing its growth.

Electrolysis, X-ray or depilatories are offered you on the bare word of the operators and manufacturers. De MIRACLE is not. It is the only method which is indorsed by physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and prominent magazines.

De MIRACLE mailed sealed in plain wrapper on receipt of $1.00. Your money back without question (no red tape) if it fails to do all that is claimed for it. Booklet sent free in plain, sealed envelope, upon request. Write for it to-day to De MIRACLE CHEMICAL CO., 23 Queen St. West, Toronto. For sale by

QUEER JAPAN.

A Land Where Laughter Has No Relation to Pleasure.

In "More Queer Things About Japan" Douglas Sladen says: "Perhaps one of the severest of etiquettes in Japan is that of smiles. When you have lived in that land of smiles you will learn in time that when you can understand a Japanese smile you may hope to understand the people. A daughter-in-law must always present a smiling face to her mother-in-law; the servant must smile when his mistress dismisses him. But the news of a death must be told with laughter. Laughter is reserved for very special occasions and has no relation to joy. Smiles are used on every occasion to conceal real feelings. They are not always significant of pleasure.

"No wants has the Japanese," the same writer continues. "He can live in his clothes without a tent, he can live on rice or offal of the sea, and he is so accustomed to carrying heavy weights and running long distances that he can be his own commissariat and even his own horse."

If the Japanese are somewhat lax as regards their religion, they are at any rate believers in cleanliness. The writer says: "Personal cleanliness is a virtue which all Japanese servants possess. It is no unusual thing for a Japanese servant to apologize to a mistress for not having had time to bathe more than three times that day."

SERVANTS IN ENGLAND.

The Case of Muggins, Who Wished She Were Dead.

The terrors of etiquette below stairs! There once strayed into my employ a housemaid whose career hitherto had been confined to lodging houses. Upstairs she always looked frightened, and her face had a great attraction for "smuts," but she was very willing and very competent.

"It is not for me to ask madam to send Muggins away, but the rest of us will go if Muggins stays. I don't know where she has lived out before, but she drinks out of her saucer and does not even know that we expect her to be down in our sitting room at half past 4 dressed in her black and ready to pour out the servants' tea." Of course I gave Muggins notice, recognizing that the lodging house was her proper sphere, and in the month that followed I knew she suffered martyrdom. She used to wipe her eyes stealthily, and as she was not proud I showed her some sympathy.

"They ain't nice to me downstairs like you are, ma'am," she sobbed, "though I'm doing my best. Cook says she won't wipe up the dishes for the likes of me."

"Never mind, Muggins. You'll be going soon, and, after all, you have learned a good deal here," I consoled her.

"I wish," said Muggins, "I was dead."—Mrs. John Lane in Harper's Bazar.

THE DOG'S COLD NOSE.

Its Origin, According to the Log Book of Noah's Ark.

"The true story of the dog's cold nose has been handed down to us sailors from the log book of the ark," says a sailor in the New York Times. "Mrs. Noah went down one morning to the potato bin in the lower hold for the vegetables required for the noonday meal. Her favorite collie dog, Nip, followed her, as was his daily custom. While Mrs. Noah was sorting out the tubers the ark collided with a small snag, which punctured a small hole in her side close to where the lady stood. Seeing that immediate action was necessary, she took off her woolen petticoat and apron and stuffed them into the hole, but the pressure of the water forced the things out, and so she put them back again and sat on them, calling loudly for assistance. But no one seemed to hear her, as the animals were making such a noise. In her position she leaned back so that the backs of her arms were pressed up against the cold sides of the vessel; hence the backs of women's arms are always cold. The water was coming in fast, and she began to fear for the safety of the ark, so she jumped up and, grabbing Nip, put his nose into the hole and bade him stay there until she went to the fore hatch and shouted for help. A carpenter's mate heard her and came down into the hold with a soft pine plug, released poor Nip and stopped the leak. The water outside was very cold, and Nip got a cold nose, and hence all healthy dogs have a cold nose."

Nobody can help being born stupid, but anybody can help becoming stupider than he was born.—Lady Helen Forbes.

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

A GREAT BEAUTIFIER.

"Fruit is a great beautifier, if women would only believe it," said an old physician to a young woman who had consulted him in a state of great anxiety over her complexion. "Fruit, especially fruits like oranges, grape fruits, grapes and apples, go far towards clearing the skin and preserving that indescribable look of youth which, on analysis, is found to consist in bright eyes, living hair and a fresh, vital complexion. After all it is the sagging muscle, the tired eyes, the hint of exhaustion, and fatigue about the skin and hair that in so many women produce the impression of past youth. To be able to dissipate and banish that impression is worth a great deal to the woman in society and the woman in business, and it is worth making great sacrifices for.

"One sacrifice in particular, that I would recommend, is the substitution of fruit for frozen desserts and for the hundred and one nice but naughty things in the pastry line that women are so fond of. Try eating fruit between meals when you want to nibble at something. Eat fruit always before breakfast. Take hot lemonade, without much sugar, two or three mornings a week, and see if those blotches don't fade away as if by magic."

BRIDESMAIDS' GIFTS.

Just the plain gold bracelets that slip on over the hand without a clasp are much liked as bridesmaids' gifts. These come in fourteen karat gold, either in the bright or dull finish, and cost from $14 to $25. Similar to the diamond heart, which cost upward of $100, are those of pearl, which are extremely pretty, and the expense is much less. For instance, a pretty pearl heart set only on one side can be bought for $17; incrusted on both sides, $22.

Lace pins are no longer given, for the reason that they are no longer worn, the collar pin having taken their place. But the latter are never given as a bridesmaid present. Most of these bits of jewelry mentioned may be used as engagement presents if such are desired. Bracelets, particularly, are used in this connection.

A WIDOWER'S SUSCEPTIBILITY.

A widower is a tame animal and stands without tying. No woman can scare him. He is overconfident and that is his great weakness. He has been through it all and is not to be caught a second time. He feels impervious to the approaches of women in any form or guise. The widow finds him really a rather knotty problem. He presents difficulties that are wholly absent in a man who has never felt the matrimonial halter draw. He looks upon the widow with amused indifference. But a young and attractive woman who has never been married quickly arouses his sympathies. He in nine cases out of ten shows remarkable endurance of her siege of his heart, and we all know that it is but a step from endurance to pity and thence to embraces. His doom is quickly sealed.

WOMAN AND THE BALLOT.

Given the ballot woman would educate herself to an intelligent use of it. This was the prevailing note of Dr. Augusta Stowe-Gullen's address on "Woman as a Citizen" at the Normal school, Victoria, to the Household Economic Society. A woman would be unhampered, said the speaker, with the many encumbrances, such as party spirit, that men are subject to, and would learn to think for herself. Woman's suffrage in New Zealand was a success. In their civic societies women are studying questions of national importance. Canadian laws, if depended upon alone, would leave the woman with very few rights. Although women had already voted, old institutions had not been overturned, babies were born and cared for just as kindly, if more intelligently, and the regular spring housecleaning went on with the same regularity. Woman herself was morally responsible for the existing impediments to her progress towards recognition by the state owing to her own primitive perception of just principles, the excessive development of maternal love, and her unwillingness to submit to the appropriation of her labors without due recognition and compensation. Woman paid taxes, but was politically, socially, legally and educationally injured by her disfranchisement. When women had voted the result was better men in office and a cleaner and purer Government.

BROAD WAISTS POPULAR.

This is the hour of the woman with the twenty-two-inch waist. Take up any fashion plate for two years ago and compare it with a fashion plate of 1905. Note the broadening of the waist line. Every article of dress, from the girdle to the gathered skirt and the pleated overpacket has a tendency to make the waist look big. Broad sashes and girdles extending almost to the bust line certainly give the effect of a bigger waist than did the narrow belt, which we pulled down into a pin point as far as it would go. Full blouses, big sleeves and pleated skirts all enlarge the appearance of the figure, so that the waist has to be let out in order to be in proportion with the rest of the woman.

It is a glorious moment for the health culturists and it is a magnificent chance for the girl who abominates stays to fling her corsets in the trash bag. Dame Fashion must be getting old, since she is going in for comfort instead of for beauty. She has stopped doing so many reckless things that she did in her youth. She has stopped dyeing her hair, pinching her feet, wearing her hat on one side, and, best of all, she has done away with her wasplike waist and her iron-bound corset, every steel of which was a big nail in the fashionable woman's coffin.

All hail the girl of the twenty-two-inch waist!

MADAME CURIE

The Famous Discoverers of Radium

All the known radium in the world could be put into a tablespoon, yet this less than an ounce of the magic metal has set the scientists of two continents guessing at this new conundrum of nature. The answers are very wonderful, very stimulating, but very unsatisfactory, so far as the theories are concerned, that seek to explain this rebel element which seems to defy so outrageously Nature's strictest laws. To M. Pierre Curie, a modest chemist, and his wife, belongs the honor of discovering the miraculous metal.

They are poor, hard-working people, consecrated to science, caring little for wealth or fame or position. Reserved and conservative, they speak with extreme caution as to their discovery made in 1898; although the non-scientific world has just awakened to the revelation in the past two years.

In a little, old-fashioned house at the extreme end of Paris, near the outer boulevard, whose criminals have given the section an unsavory name, lives the devoted couple with their one child and M. Curie's father, who is also a famous chemist. Some years ago Mlle. Sklodowski, a poor Polish girl, went from Warsaw, her native town, to Paris to study. She had talent and pluck for the double fight against poverty and opposition. Her first triumph was when she entered a competitive examination for higher mathematics. Her success was so overwhelming that the other competitors were eclipsed and eliminated. Not having money enough to enter one of the regular schools, she entered a municipal working-class institute, where M. Curie directed the laboratory. Soon she was his assistant and a little later his wife.

Some of the experiments of Becquerel on the radio-activity of uranium specially appealed to her, and she determined to experiment on the refuse ore of pitchblende, from which uranium is taken. It was then considered worthless, like the culm of our coalfields. She drew her husband into the search and it took four years to get enough traces of this metal, worth three thousand times its weight in pure gold, to show its properties. Her paper on radium won for her the degree of Doctor of Physical Science.

As a grain of musk will perfume a room for a century or more, constantly throwing off fine particles without decreasing its weight, so radium bombards the ether with light, heat, energy, and half a dozen other marvellous effects, without appreciable loss, and in a thousand million years it would have lost only one-millionth of its bulk. It is the Andrew Carnegie of the metals, constantly giving but never growing measurably poorer.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

How the Stomach and Kidneys Depend on the Inside Nerves.

Every day medical science becomes more simple—and "more certain." Simplicity and certainty go hand in hand. For science has learned that while there are many diseases, yet there are but few real "causes" of disease. That is, there are many names by which we know aches and pains and disorders. But most of these ailments spring from a common cause.

For instance, indigestion, sour stomach, heartburn, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles—diabetes, Bright's disease and other kidney disorders—heart troubles, liver troubles, bowel troubles, nervousness, fretfulness, sleeplessness, irritability—all of these ailments are due to a single cause. Painful, disagreeable and dangerous, though they be, they are not separate diseases — and they are not to be treated as such. They are merely "outward" signs of "inward" trouble—nerve trouble.

Understand first that we have two entirely separate nerve systems. When we walk, or talk, or act, we call into play a certain set of nerves —nerves which obey our mental commands. That is why the arm can be raised, or the mouth opened, or the eye shut, at the slightest desire. That is why your fingers can delicately pick up a pin one moment, and hold a heavy hammer the next.

But these are not the nerves we are to consider here.

There is another set of nerves which manages and governs and actuates the heart and the stomach, the kidneys and the liver and all of the vital functions. You cannot control these nerves. By no supreme effort of mind can you make your heart stop or start—nor can you even make it vary by a single beat a minute. And so with the stomach and the liver and the kidneys and the bowels —they are automatic—they do their work at a certain set speed whether you are awake or asleep — whether you want them to or not.

It is on these "inside" nerves that life and health depends. So long as these nerves perform their proper duties we are well and strong. When they fail, we know it by the inevitable symptoms — stomach, heart, liver, kidney troubles. And these troubles have no other origin, ever than in these same nerves. For the stomach, the heart, the liver, the kidneys, have no power of their own, no self control. They owe their every impulse to the inside nerves. The nerves are the masters. The organs their slaves.

These automatic nerves are sometimes called the "sympathetic" nerves This name is given them because of the close bond of sympathy which exists between all branches. This explains why stomach trouble often develops into heart trouble — why indigestion brings on nervousness — why diseases become complicated. It explains, too, why ordinary medical treatments are wrong—why medicine so frequently fails.

For, despite the discoveries of science, the common remedies of the day are designed to treat the organ, not the nerve — the symptom instead of the 'cause.'

Don't you, though you may not know medicine at all, see that this is wrong? That it is mere patchwork? That while the suffering organ is enjoying its temporary relief, the nerve that is really sick may be getting worse and worse? Does this not explain to you why relapse so frequently follows a supposed cure? Does this not account for the uncertainties of medicine?

More than thirty years ago this thought came to me:

"If life and health depend upon perfect heart action, upon proper stomach digestion, upon correct kidney filtering, why does not life itself depend upon these life governing power nerves — these inside nerves."

I realized, too, that all stimulants which result from one cause may, of course, be cured by one remedy. I resolved not to doctor the organs but to treat the one nerve system which operates them all.

For those who treat only the symptoms need a different remedy for each. Such treatments are only palliative; the results do not last. A cure can never come in disease of the stomach, heart, liver or kidneys, until the inside nerve power is restored. When that is done, Nature removes the symptoms. There is no need of doctoring them.

My remedy — now known by Druggists everywhere, as Dr. Shoop's Restorative — is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve — the power nerve—and builds up, and strengthens it and makes it well.

There is no mystery — no miracle. I can explain my treatment to you as easily as I can tell you why cold freezes water and why heat melts ice. Nor do I claim a discovery. For every detail of my treatment is based on truths so fundamental that none can deny them. And every ingredient of my medicine is as old as the hills it grows on. I simply applied the truths and combined the ingredients into a remedy that is practically certain.

In more than a million homes my remedy is now known, and relied upon. Yet you may not have heard of it. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send no money — make no promise — take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have never tried my remedy, I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle — not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. Will you accept this opportunity to learn at MY EXPENSE ABSOLUTELY how to be rid forever of all forms of nervousness — to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write to-day.

MARQUIS OYAMA, WAR LORD.

THE NAPOLEON OF THE ORIENT HE IS NOW CALLED.

Field Marshal the Marquis Oyama, Chief of the General Staff, and Commander-in-chief of the Japanese army, is one of the few Generals of modern times who may claim to rank among the giants of war who have led troops in the field. The English call him the Wellington of Manchuria, which is the highest praise they can bestow upon any commander, but already in European capitals, strategists, amazed by the boldness of a campaign now crowned with complete success, style him the Napoleon of the Orient.

The Marquis Oyama, who is 62 years old, says The Philadelphia Public Ledger, was educated in France, and served in the Franco-Prussian war as an attache. Up to the time he made his report on that conflict the Japanese army, which was only in its beginning as a modern force, was being trained on the French model. After his return home this system gave way to that of the Prussian, and this in turn has been greatly improved by Japanese originality and by the adoption of what is best and most useful in the other armies of the world. Later in life Oyama again travelled extensively in Europe, absorbing the ideas of the military systems, and once more in Japan threw himself into recasting the whole military system, winning the appreciation and favor of the Emperor and of Field Marshal the Marquis Yamagata.

Nor was his genius confined to the Ministry of War, as he stood for a space at the head of the navy, and also as Minister of Education when the transition of the new world power was completing.

A queer compound of ugliness, wit, strength and Oriental cunning, the Marquis Oyama has an enormously receptive mind. He is a rapid and deep thinker, and not only attracts but moulds those about him to any set purpose with Napoleonic directness, although with admirable and characteristic Japanese grace. While not a tall man in any sense, he is a shade above the average Japanese in height, with a strong head, apparently placed upon immense shoulders without the interposition of a neck.

He is a linguist, as are most of the Japanese officers, an advantage not possessed in the same proportion in any other military or naval service in the world. Smallpox has pitted his round, brown face, but his ugliness is relieved by a pair of magnetic black eyes, which twinkle with humor, or squint when their owner is deep in thought.

The first real war experience in which he was an actor came in the civil war in Japan, in which the Satsuma revolt was suppressed, but fame came to him in the Chino-Japanese war, ten years ago. As a strategist and commander he there achieved distinction which has been heightened by his wonderful work in the present Manchurian campaign.

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

On the Bloody Road to Harbin.

(Detroit News-Tribune.)

It's a rocky road to Dublin," so the Irishman has said,
And perhaps he knows the facts whereof he speaks:
But the Russian who is routed from his peaceful board and bed
Has been mutt'ring something diff'rent now for weeks!
Sly Oyama sent him backward on the bare Manchurian plain;
(Every wire the Czar received spelled out defeat);
And the Russian learned a saying that he whispers while he's praying—
It's a bloody road to Harbin on retreat!

From the sea they chased him inland, did these fighters of Japan,
Till our old friend Kuropatkin had the cramps;
But he never failed his soldiers, he was always in the van,
On these "most successful" moves to safer camps!
For Oyama sent him backward over many a rocky field,
(And the medicine was anything but sweet),
But the Russian learned an axiom from the rapid-firing Maxim—
It's a bloody road to Harbin on retreat!

Oh, the battle raged most fiercely when they clashed at Liao Yang,
But the Japs were there to do it and they did;
For they whipped the hulking Russians till the Chinese welkin rang,
And the Czar's courageous troopers hit the grid,
Old Oyama sent them backward on a swift and steady run,
(Shakhe river proved disast'rous in the heat),
And from every flying missile came the dreary, mournful whistle—
It's a bloody road to Harbin on retreat!

And then Mukden's Chinese graveyard proved a most unwholesome town,
For the Japs had circled round it in the dark.
They were fewer by some thousands when the gory sun went down,
But Oyama sized it up as quite a lark.
For he sent the Russians backward to the walls of old Tie Pass;
And then out to Santoupu with flying feet,
Kuropatkin still is running from Oyama's steady gunning—
It's a bloody road to Harbin on retreat!

Descendant of Defoe.

At Essex Quarter Session the other day Howard C. Pearce pleaded guilty to stealing £30 from a grocer at Southend.

Counsel said that Pearce was a descendant of Daniel Defoe and inherited the author's romantic disposition. He had been to sea and returned to Southend, and when he committed this theft ran away to Canada. Being conscience-stricken, however, he returned and surrendered.

He was released on promising to go to sea.

No Argument Will Convince a Women that a flour is all right, if she can't make good bread with it. The one argument that wins every woman in favor of ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR is, that it never fails to turn out the most beautiful Bread and Cake and the most crisp and delicious Pastry when used according to the very simple "Royal Household" recipes. That one fact outweighs all the theories of two thousand years.

No other flour has ever made so many intimate friends among Canadian women in so short a time.—Perhaps it's because "Royal Household" is made by the new electrical process—that makes a wonderful difference in flour.

Your grocer sells "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" and you can have the recipes by simply sending your name and address to The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Limited, Montreal, and mentioning the name of this paper.

When the scalp throws off either dandruff or a gummy substance, it is an evidence of scalp disease, and no time should be lost in correcting it. You certainly would not hesitate to take treatment were you to look at this matter through a magnifying glass. When highly magnified it resembles a working mass of insects. These creatures absorb the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp causing the scalp to become dry and feverish, resulting in the loss of hair and finally baldness. Seven Sutherland Sisters' Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner works wonders in all such cases. It thoroughly eradicates all trace of scalp bacteria and makes the hair grow unusually long, strong and beautiful. One 50 cent bottle [illegible] NOW at all druggists, two sizes, 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

A story is told of two ladies, neighbors. It seems that one of the matrons has been in the habit, during recent years, of presenting her husband with little boys and girls with commendable regularity. The other lady was less fortunate—or more fortunate—it all depends on the point of view. At all events she commiserated deeply with the fruitful matron on the size of her family. Now the latter is doing a little quiet chuckling. The lady who believes in small families has just presented her husband with twins.

We are going to have a reunion, that's sure, and it's up to everybody connected with it to see that it's a good one.

AN INGLORIOUS CLIMAX

Hon. Clifford Sifton Speaks One Way But Votes Another.

He Gave Two Excuses for His Extraordinary Conduct: (1) Because the Separate Schools Guaranteed by the Bills Are Undenominational Schools and Under Public Control in Every Respect—(2)—Because He Did Not Want to Defeat the Government on the Question.

Ottawa, March 25.—Hon. Clifford Sifton has decided to vote for the separate school clauses as amended. His reasons for adopting this course were submitted to the House yesterday in a speech which very easily ranks as an effort of Mr. Sifton's parliamentary life. It was in many ways a great speech, but it must be said in all frankness that few speeches of such merit have had such an inglorious climax.

Mr. Sifton's whole argument was against the educational clauses of the bill. He did not attempt to justify the legislation on constitutional grounds, nor was he at all guarded in the expression of his conviction that separate schools are not in the interests of the country. The weight of his attack fell on the educational clauses as first presented to the House.

Hits at Fitzpatrick.

In this connection he questioned the good faith of the Minister of Justice by hinting that a deliberate effort was made to confer on the minority privileges which they do not at present enjoy. Mr. Fitzpatrick flushed scarlet under the insinuation, which was not less effective by reason of the polite language in which it was expressed.

According to Mr. Sifton's interpretation of the first draft of the clauses the hands of the new Legislatures would have been so tied that if they decided to build a Provincial university at a cost of $250,000, they would have to give the same amount for the establishment of the separate schools university. Also he said the separate schools would share in $50,000,000 of lands, constituting the schools trust.

The sweeping character of Mr. Sifton's declamations of the original clause somewhat prepared the way for his reluctant acceptance of the clause as amended. But he was reluctant to concur in the imposition of separate schools on the new Provinces in any shape or form. He confessed his reluctance in words which could not be misconstrued.

His Two Excuses.

He had only two excuses for agreeing to a compromise to which he had conscientious objections and, bluntly put, are:

(1)—Because the separate schools guaranteed by the bill are undenominational schools and under public control in every respect.

(2)—Because he did not want to defeat the Government on the question.

Mr. Sifton was frank almost to the point of impudence in the cool confession of his intention to vote for a measure at which his conscience revolted. He made no bone about it. He did not attempt to coat the pill prepared for Protestant sentiment with absurd distortions of the constitution, nor did he shed tears like Laurier, Fitzpatrick, Fielding and Paterson for the poor, down-trodden ministers. He, at least, was manly in the presentation of his argument. He was inconsistent, but he frankly admitted that he was inconsistent.

Mr. Sifton's speech, though designed to let the Government down in the easiest possible way, was in reality a damaging case against it. The House so regarded it, and the Western and Ontario Liberals who expected to find in Mr. Sifton's speech a means of squaring themselves with their constituents do not conceal their disappointment.

Northrup Ridicules Pretence.

Mr. Northrup, who followed, ridiculed the shallow pretence involved in the position taken by the former Minister of the Interior. As Mr. Northrup pointed out, it is ridiculous to minimize the difference of principle involved in the discussion. He showed clearly that Mr. Sifton's position was neither logical nor consistent, and commented on the care which the gentleman had taken to do the Government no harm. The constitutional aspects of the question, he pointed out, could not be escaped, and no juggling of words in the drawing up of ingenious clauses would enable the Government of Canada to do what it is not empowered to do, under the British North America Act.

The speech of Mr. Oliver, of Alberta, the last speaker of the evening, was rather a dreary effort. He is one of those who were expected to stand out against the effort to fasten separate schools on the west, but he made it abundantly clear that he intends to swallow the whole Government program.

The name of Mr. Oliver has been mentioned prominently in connection with the vacant portfolio of the Interior Department, and the way to the goal of his ambition does not lie through any assertion of independent judgment.

Hon. Mr. Fielding Has a Fall.

Ottawa, March 25.—Hon. W. S. Fielding had a narrow escape from injury last evening. He was driving home from the House of Commons to his home at 6 o'clock in a closed sleigh. On Metcalfe street, near the Windsor Hotel, the snow is mountains high and the sleigh upturned. It looked very grave for a few minutes, but the Minister of Finance got out uninjured and walked the remainder of the way home.

To See the Victorian.

Ottawa, March 25.—The Messrs. Allan have invited the Cabinet Ministers and members of Parliament to go down to Halifax and board their new turbine steamer Victorian and take a trip to St. John. The intention is to have a special train leave Montreal on Tuesday and meet the Victorian on her arrival. The return from St. John will be made by special train, reaching Montreal Sunday.

Oldest Orangeman Dies.

The Benefits of Sugar.

A correspondent remarks that sugar has modified the history of Europe and of the world in more ways than one. Used in England four centuries ago almost exclusively in the preparation of medicines and long afterward an article of luxury only accessible to the rich, it has by enlarged production and cheapened manufacture been brought within the reach of all. The universal use of this practically pure carbohydrate, which is not only a freely burning fuel and proteid sparer, but a muscle food, increasing the power of doing work and lessening fatigue, must have had widespread and beneficial effects on the national health. Especially in the case of children, whose greed of sugar is the expression of a physiological want, has that food been valuable in conducing to growth, contentment and well being.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

Education gives a woman more words to talk with.

VARICOCELE & STRICTURE

No other disease is so prevalent among men as Varicocele. As it interferes with the nutrition of the sexual organs it produces weakness, loss of semen through the urine, decay of the organs, pains in the loins, aching in the back, nervousness, despondency, bashfulness, palpitation of the heart, constipation, and a combination of these results in complete LOSS OF MANHOOD. Thousands of young and middle-aged men are troubled with STRICTURE. If you have reason to believe you are afflicted with it, don't neglect it. It will ruin you. Don't let doctors experiment on you by cutting, stretching or tearing it. Our NEW METHOD TREATMENT dissolves the stricture tissue, hence it disappears and can never return. We cure Varicocele and Stricture without operation or loss of time. The treatment may be taken at home privately. Send for our Free Illustrated Book on VARICOCELE and STRICTURE. WE GUARANTEE TO CURE OR NO PAY.

Kidneys & Bladder

All sexual complaints affect these organs, hence the kidneys are a great source of disease. Have you aching or weakness over the small of the back, tendency to urinate frequently, deposit in urine, coldness of hands or feet, a drowsy feeling in the morning. Don't neglect your kidneys. Our NEW METHOD TREATMENT is guaranteed to cure any disease of these organs or no pay.

I was operated on twice, undergoing great suffering, but only got temporary relief. I was finally advised to try the NEW METHOD TREATMENT of Drs. K. & K. The enlarged veins disappeared in six weeks, the stricture tissue was removed in eight weeks and my sexual energy and vitality returned so I was a man in every respect. oratory.' The room was sound and air-proof, and ventilated by a casement in the roof which could be opened a quarter of an inch or thrown wide so that the fumes from the crucibles and chemical retorts couls escape in a few moments. The walls were covered with a composition which resisted the corrosive effects of the noxious fumes on which Vane so often animadverted. A draught, even a breath of air, is often fatal to a chemical experiment, so Julian had contrived that the room should be rendered absolutely hermetically sealed by the closing of the ventilator, which was worked, on the simplest principle, by a couple of ropes, passing over a pulley, which he could control by a lever fixed under his writing table.

As he entered he saw, by the light from the furnace, the bent figure of Deborah. She was moving about the room in her noiseless way, a tortoise-shell cat, which had attached itself to her, following her as noiselessly and rubbing against her. A silver tea equipage stood on a small table near the furnace, and as Julian entered she pointed to it.

Julian nodded and sank into the easy-chair near the table, and Deborah stood quite motionless and as waiting for his commands, her full grey eyes fixed on his as a dog's is fixed upon his master.

Julian wiped the sweat from his brow and poured himself out a cup of tea, as if unconscious of her presence, then he looked at her and said, on his fingers:

"Deborah, keep away from the front of the house. Sir Chandos Orme has seen you—and spoken to me."

"Yes, Mr. Julian," she replied with a swift movement of her thin fingers. "Is there anything else?"

"No, no, nothing," he signed. "You can go now."

She turned, then paused and looked as him.

"Are you sure there is nothing else? You are not looking well; you are looking as it you were ill. Is there nothing Deborah can do? You would trust me, sir?"

"Yes, yes," he said, impatiently. "What should there be? I am quite well. Have you made up the fire?"

"Yes, Mr. Julian."

"Well, then, you may go. Here—take this cat with you."

She went for the cat, but it eluded her and crept closer to Julian.

"Oh, never mind, then," he said, impatiently. "Let it be. How hot the room is! It is the fire, I suppose. Open the ventilator, please."

She went to the lever and opened with difficulty the window in the top of the wall.

"It wants a new rope," she signed.

Julian nodded irritably. "Yes, yes, I'll see to it."

She glanced at him, with the devotion of the spaniel, waited a moment to see if there were any other orders, then left the room, carefully closing the hermetically sealed door after her.

Julian leant back and sipped his tea. His heart was beating fiercely, his brain was in a whirl. The melodramatic scene in which he had played a principal part danced before him. His lips had touched hers, Judith's! She had promised to be his wife! His wife! He closed his eyes and a smile curved his lips.

But the condition! That he should reign as master at Lesborough. He had accepted it in the moment of excitement, of passionate ecstacy, as he would have accepted it if it had been the advent of the millenium. Was there any condition, any stipulation, which he would not have accepted?

His! That beautiful woman he loved with a passion that absorbed his whole being. Her kiss, cold and fierce as it had been, burnt on his lips and still thrilled him. His! Judith, the loveliest woman on earth, the one woman to be desired of all others. His passion left no room for thought of Vane, who had pleaded his, Julian's, cause. Some natures are incapable of gratitude, and Julian's was one of them. He put Vane's advocacy aside as if it had not occurred. All his thoughts, his heart, were bent on Judith.

And he would call her his when he reigned as master at Lesborough! It did not occur to him to doubt her promise, for that promise had been dictated by jealousy and hate, and they are stronger and more binding than love.

When he was master! That meant when Vane was dead, and he, Julian, reigned in his stead.

But Vane was alive, was but a little the elder of Julian. No matter. He had her promise; there was hope for him. All sorts of accidents might happen, as Sir Chandos, with his worldly wisdom, had said. Vane might be killed in the hunting field; a careless shot in the—

He wiped the sweat from his forehead again and looked round the room. His eyes fell upon the crucible on the spirit furnace, and the lover gave place, for the moment, to the scientist. He rose and went to the furnace. The liquid in the pot was emitting a bluish flame, a strange and pungent odor, so dense and penetrating that, as he bent over it, it caught his breath and made it difficult.

He looked round the room. The ventilator was half closed; his hand went to the lever which admitted or closed the air; but he shut the ventilator, and stood for a moment as if considering deeply. Then he went to a cupboard, took out a length of muslin, and, after soaking it in a liquid which he prepared in a bowl, wrapped it round his mouth and nostrils.

With deliberate movements he locked the door, saw that the ventilator was tightly closed, then lifted the iron cover from the pot on the furnace. A subtle, penetrating fume arose and filled the sombre room; the air became thick and palpable.

Protected as he was by the muslin soaked in the antidoting solution he was conscious of a heavy pressure on the lungs and heart, pressure that seemed almost intolerable. But he displayed no fear or dismay; indeed, a smile of triumph shone in his eyes.

"It is the Borgia fume!" he mumbled behind his muslin mask, as the atmosphere grew thicker, more dense; a cry pierced the silence. It was a moan, a piteous moan, from the cat which had sprung upon the table and was crouching there looking at Julian entreatingly.

"Puss, poor puss!" he murmured, a cruel, pitiless light in his eyes. "You don't feel well, eh? No wonder! You can't breathe in this atmosphere? I'm not surprised. But it is going to be worse!"

Protected by the muslin bandage, he went to her and stroked her, and the wretched animal dropped on its side and wailed to him imploringly.

"Nearly gone, eh?" he said. "Let us see what a stronger dose will do."

He glided to the furnace and stirred the compound; the fumes grew thicker, denser, and the cat, with a spasmodic jerk of all her limbs, fell prone on the table, her clews extended, her mouth wide open.

Julian went to her and turned her over.

"Dead!" he said. "Dead, quite dead. It was a pity you stayed, pussy! But it would have killed a man, to say nothing of a cat—" He stopped suddenly with his eyes fixed on the unfortunate cat. "It would have killed a man, unless he were protected as I am. Killed a man!"

He took up the cat and examined it closely. It was rigid with death, its eyes staringly open, its teeth showing.

"No one could withstand it," he muttered. "A cat has nine lives, so they say, a man only one. Poor puss!"

Suddenly he started. There had come a knock at the door. He stood staring above his bandage from the cat to the door. Then he caught up the dead animal, tossed it unceremoniously into a cupboard, opened the ventilator to its widest, removed the protective muslin from his face and, after watching the fumes disappear through the ventilator, opened the door.

"Oh, it's you, Vane," he said, casually. "Come in."

"Phew!" said Vane. "What an infernal stink! What on earth have you been doing?"

"Only an experiment, quite an ordinary experiment," answered Julian. "Come in."

CHAPTER XVII.

Success is sweet, we are told, but the sweet was embittered to Nina by the sight of Judith at the theatre, though she tried to be grateful to the Providence which had rescued her from poverty, given her so good a friend as Polly, and, ah, best of all, provided work for her.

Blessed work! The curse which we have changed into a blessing; and not more blessed to any man than the artist, whose one prayer, after he has finished one task, is, "Give me strength for the next!"

Nina sprang at Mr. Harcourt's suggestion that she should write a long play, and she set to work at it at once with feverish energy; for she knew that only by brain toil, the toil the artist delight in, could she escape from brooding over the past and the fate that had linked her to a man who was in love with the beautiful creature she had seen in the box at the theatre.

But if Nina's joy was dimmed, Polly's shone brightly.

"I can see your future as plainly as one of those fortune-telling people in Bond Street," she declared solemnly to Nina. "You are going to be a famous authoress and play writer like—" She mentioned two or three of the ladies who have scored success as dramatists and so broken the spell which has so long rested upon women writers for the stage. "You are going to be famous, Decima. Why, you are famous, already! Haven't you had most wonderful notices; and aren't the stalls almost full when the first piece begins? A thing unheard of till 'The Betrothed.' And wouldn't you like to have better rooms, and have a maid of your own, like Miss Tracey?"

But Nina shook her head and laughed.

"No, no, Polly. Let us go on as we are. Who knows? This next play may be a failure, and then—then we should have to go back to the millinery business."

"Not you! You've seen the last of bonnet-building!" retorted Polly, confidently. "But, oh, I do hope you won't be so silly and wicked as to overwork yourself. You are looking pale and thin—no, it's no use your denying it; I can see quite plainly. You don't take enough exercise; and I'm sure you want it. I've read somewhere that literary people ought to spend nearly all their time in the open air."

"You're thinking of consumptives, I fancy, Polly," said Nina; but she knew there was sound sense in the suggestion, and she went out more frequently.

There are worse places in the early autumn than the London parks—one sometimes wonders whether Londoners are as intimate with those parks as they ought to be—and Nina found, in this, the dead season, that they were almost as lonely as a country lane. There is one part of Hyde Park—which wild horses shall not induce me to indicate—where one could wander to and fro for hours without meeting a fellow human being; and it was here she found the plot of her new play and worked out its characters and scenes, coming home in the afternoon to put the thing on paper. During these hours she was almost happy; it was at night, as she tried to sleep, and in the early hours of the morning when she lay awake counting them as they were boomed by Big Ben, who hath no pity upon the sick and the sleepless who lie within hearing of his loud and insistent tongue, that her unsatisfied heart cried, "I am ahungered; give me food!"

Now and again she stole to her seat at the back of the upper circle at the Momus and looked at her little play, and of course she saw its many faults more plainly each visit, and learned the lesson which can only be learned by these faults of ours.

Sometimes she stayed to the end of the musical piece and went round to the stage door to wait for Polly; and one night she had what Polly would have called an adventure.

She was standing in the passage near the doorkeeper's den, the piece was just over and some of the men and women already leaving the theatre. As a rule they were all too tired or too much engaged in talking and laughing among themselves to notice her as she stood in a corner, but to-night a super, who had been drinking, caught sight of her and, stopping, eyed her with a tipsy smile.

"Waiting for me, miss?" he asked.

Do not blame the boy for being dull and stupid. You are the stupid one! Stupid because you never thought about his liver. There is where all his trouble lies. A sluggish liver makes a sluggish mind. A boy cannot study when his blood is full of bile!

TRY THEM. YOU WILL USE NO OTHER

When the liver refuses to perform its functions of secreting bile and the bowels become inactive and loaded with foul waste materials, the effect on the mind is most distressing.

Under such conditions the brightness of living fades, and gloomy, unwelcome forebodings settle down. Fretfulness and nervousness with vague fears of impending danger like phantoms distort the mental vision.

What ails you? It's your liver, congested, torpid, sulky. What's to be done? Take two of Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills after dinner and again at night. What then? you ask. Just wait till morning. You will see things in a new light then, the light of renewed liver activity. Your brain will be cleared, your appetite returned and life again attractive. Keep this treatment up for a week, and your blood will be bright red, purged of impurities. Your bowels regulated, your stomach natural and the bile functions of the liver acting in harmony with digestion and nutrition.

Don't worry! Cheer up! Two great maxims for us all. Nor will we have any occasion to if we keep our livers and bowels healthy. Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills contain every element needed to assist Nature in establishing liver activity and regularity of the bowels. Keep them in the house ready for use. CASTRO FLATLY REFUSES.

Says There Are No Issues With U. S. for Arbitration.

Willemstad, Island of Curacoa, March 25.—It is announced from Caracas, Venezuela, that President Castro yesterday replied to Minister Bowen's final proposal for arbitration, denying that Venezuela has questions pending with the United States, and saying the case of the New York & Bermudez Asphalt Co. must remain in the courts.

A Flat Refusal.

Washington, March 25.—Minister Bowen cabled the State Department yesterday from Caracas that President Castro had flatly refused to arbitrate the pending issues between Venezuela and the United States. The subject was the principal topic at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet. That the situation is not regarded as acute at this time was indicated clearly by the determination of the President and his advisors to pay no present heed to President Castro's refusal to arbitrate the existing differences. It is the indicated intentions of the President and Secretary of War Taft to await further developments in Venezuela.

Want Sailors Released.

The Hague, March 25.—The Government of the Netherlands intends, either alone or in conjunction with other powers having differences with Venezuela, to take vigorous measures to secure the release of the five Dutch sailors illegally imprisoned for seven months in that country. It is thought probable that in the event of there being no material change in the situation in the Far East, some of the Netherlands warships maintaining neutrality in the Dutch East Indies can be transferred to Venezuelan waters in May.

Fruit-a-tives or Fruit Liver Tablets

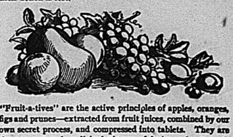
Instead of Fruit.

Fruit is a splendid tonic for stomach and liver. The active principles give fruit its medicinal value. But they occur in such minute quantities, that when fruit is taken with other food, and goes through the process of digestion, their action is lost.



"Fruit-a-tives" are the active principles of apples, oranges, figs and prunes—extracted from fruit juices, combined by our own secret process, and compressed into tablets. They are the concentrated medicinal virtues of fruits and act much more effectively than any other known treatment in curing Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Torpid Liver, Biliousness and Kidney troubles. The Wickedness of Growing Old.

Here are the three deadly symptoms of old age: Selfishness, stagnation, intolerance.

If we find them in ourselves we may know we are growing old, even if we are on the merry side of thirty. But, happily, we have three defenses, which are invulnerable. If we use them we shall die young if we live to be a hundred. They are: Sympathy progress, tolerance.

The first is the hardest to most of us, because our own little prison of the actual is so immensely important to us. There is no denying the fact that when you have a toothache yourself it is hard to have to consider other people's aches. But it can be done, though it generally involves physical effort, for we must bestir ourselves and act. The mere feeling of sympathy expressed by action is a poor, useless thing, but the soul, determined not to grow old, can force the body to such physical effort, though there is no denying that it is hard work.

A Record Breaker.

Among the army of London carriage drivers is an Irishman noted for his native wit. It stood him in poor stead one day, however. Pat was engaged by a gentleman to drive to a hydropathic establishment.

On arrival at the gate the fare inquired, "What's your fare, driver?"

"Well, sir," said Pat, "the manest jintleman I ever drove here gave me 2 shillings."

"Is that so?" exclaimed the gentleman, who was a bit of a wag. "Well, here's a shilling for you, my man. I like the idea of breaking records."—London Globe.

To Prevent Rust.

A good mixture for use as a slush to prevent the rusting of machinery is made by dissolving an ounce of camphor in a pound of melted lard; skim off the impurities and add enough black lead to give the mixture an iron color. After cleaning the machinery carefully smear on the mixture. It can be left indefinitely, or if wiped off after twenty-four hours will prevent rust for some time. When removed, the metal should be polished with a soft cloth.

A Japanese Peculiarity.

"When a Japanese servant is rebuked or scolded," says a traveler, "he must smile like a Cheshire cat. The etiquette in smiles is very misleading at first. I often used to think that Taki, my riksha 'boy,' meant to be impertinent when he insisted on smiling when I was angry at him. But when he told me of the death of his little child with a burst of laughter I knew that this was only one of the curious details of etiquette in this topsy turvy land."

No Encouragement For Him.

"So she refused you? Well, didn't she give you any encouragement at all?"

"No, not a bit. She told me that before she'd consider the matter again I'd have to get a job and prove that I had it in me to support a family."

A KNIGHT IN SPAIN

By.... KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1904, by Frances Wilson

The partition was not very thick, and the girl often heard him whistling or singing in the next room. His repertory was extensive and confusing. "She's the bestest girl that is, and I need her in my biz," would float in to her, followed perhaps by the strains of "Samson et Delilah" or some music equally fine.

One knew the sort of a man who would sing coon songs with gusto; also the sort that would hum bits from the grand operas. The puzzling thing was to know what sort of a man would take an impartial delight in both. So in the intervals of her work she began to speculate about her unknown neighbor.

At the end of two months she tabulated her knowledge of him. He was gay and debonair. Witness the scraps of song that floated in to her. He was carelessly indifferent to women. This she gleaned from the fact that five days out of seven she could hear him tunefully asserting:

> If she be not fair to me,
> What care I how fair she be!

He smoked inveterately—a pipe, she fancied. Sometimes the faint, elusive spirit of the thing seemed to float about her hall bedroom, and she sniffed again and again, her small head well in the air, but could never be quite sure. The partition bore her startled scrutiny imperturbably, but—well, she was sure she smelled smoke.

He was about thirty. This she divined from the freshness of his voice and his boyish delight in the chatter of the elderly chambermaid, whose Irish wit would send him into peals of laughter.

Also he was a man of the world, since she heard him come in early many evenings and move about his room as if dressing for dinner. Then at half past 6 or 7 he would go out again, leaving her with an absurd sense of desolation.

They never encountered each other in the halls, much to her satisfaction, but she came to have a very distinct idea of his appearance. He was tall, broad and straight, with a clear cut face and an air of knowing his way about.

"Sure, an' he's a foine gintleman," Maggie informed her once; but, though she might have verified her idea of him, she refrained with a fine sense of personal reserve. Sometimes through the open door she caught a glimpse of his room, and her interested eyes took in the dark green walls, covered with handsome photographs, the low bookcases on either side of the fireplace and the low, broad table with its litter of books and papers.

"It certainly looks as if he were an interesting man," she thought to herself, and thereupon she entered her own room, and, taking out a sheet of paper bearing the mystical heading "My Knight In Spain," she wrote:

"Evidently educated—a college man; profession, law, literature or something of the kind."

"Maggie, is there any one in the next room?" she heard him inquire one Sunday morning. Then in answer to Maggie's muffled reply: "Little Miss Mouse, I should call her. I didn't know there was any one there, though once or twice I've thought I heard some one."

The girl blushed guiltily. Apparently he had no idea how plainly she could hear him. Then she smiled to herself. So he would call her little Miss Mouse. Well, it was fair enough, since she called him her Gentleman of Spain.

For awhile after this she noticed a decided effort on her neighbor's part to go softly. In the midst of a stave he would cease abruptly, only to begin afresh and stop again with an impatient exclamation, as if he were annoyed at not being able to remember to be quiet. At all of which, in the seclusion of her room, little Miss Mouse laughed immoderately, though in silence.

Then one morning Maggie found her in bed, her usually pale face flushed, her heavy hair covering the pillow in a tossed and tangled mass.

"It's nothing, but perhaps you'd better get a doctor," gasped Miss Mouse. "My head's so queer, and, oh, I'm so warm!"

Soon after a serene faced nurse in a striped uniform and white apron was installed in the room, and to her little Miss Mouse, down with brain fever, talked an unending jargon.

"If you can have a castle in Spain, you can certainly have a knight in Spain, can't you?" she demanded over and over again.

"Of course you can," soothed the nurse.

"I'd be very lonely if he vanished, as castles in Spain do," she said at another time, with wistful, puzzled eyes. "You don't think he will vanish, do you? Because I'm all alone here. He's the only person I really know.

"Won't you ever tell, upon your honor?" she rambled on. "It's very strange. I don't just understand it, but actually I have never seen him! Can you believe it, I've never seen him, and yet I know him so well. I don't understand it, and my head is splitting. Hold it! Hold it!"

The man in the next room was very quiet these days. From Maggie he had learned of the little artist's illness, and from her also he heard of the strange hallucination about the man in Spain. When she told him he shot a quick, piercing look from his deep set eyes, but evidently there was no connection in her mind between the sick girl's fancy and himself.

Instinctively he knew the truth. "Poor little girl," he mused. "Lonely, struggling, with nothing to feed her love of companionship and romance upon but the sense of fellowship with the unseen occupant of the next room. It is well that she hasn't seen this ugly mug of mine," he concluded grimly.

So he fell into the way of stopping to inquire about her of the nurse each morning and then of sending great bunches of violets, upon which the sick girl's half conscious eyes rested later on with dreamy pleasure.

"Who picked them?" were her first intelligent words when the fever left her and she became herself. Then, realizing where she was and what had happened, she laughed weakly and corrected herself, "Who sent them, I mean?"

At the reply a faint color crept into her cheeks, and she murmured something the nurse did not catch.

Then came the days when she sat up, feeling like a new creature come to a new world, though in appearance she was more than ever like a frail child.

"Come in. I think she would like to thank you," said the nurse when one day the man stopped to make his usual inquiry, and a moment later he was standing before little Miss Mouse, his heart thumping at the gaze of two dark fringed eyes that reminded him of violets.

She stammered out her thanks, scarcely knowing what she said, so great was her astonishment, for, in fact, the Knight In Spain, whose face she thought she knew as well as her own, was dark and most uncompromisingly ugly. Besides, he was old—forty if he was a day—and—and—

In another moment her surprise was forgotten. A big, strong hand was holding hers, and the voice that she liked so much was speaking. There was a vibrant tenderness in it that she had never noticed before—that seemed personal, that suggested, outlandish as the idea was, that to her of all the women in the world would he ever speak in just that tone.

• • • • • • • •

It was on their honeymoon that, longing to hear over and over again the beautiful truth, he questioned:

"You're sure you don't regret marrying an ugly brute like me?"

She laughed softly, laying her cheek against his, but she did not speak. With quick pain he pulled the face down where he could look into the depths of those dark fringed eyes. His lips touched her hair, and he murmured brokenly, "Oh, little Miss Mouse!"

The Dangers of Orchid Hunting.

The most beautiful region the orchid collector meets in his travels is along the Orinoco, the Rio Negro and the Amazon, in South America. The scenery at times passes beyond the beautiful and becomes so grand as to be almost terrible. Everything is on such a great scale. The rivers are the largest in the world, veritable seas at high water, the vegetation luxuriant beyond comparison and the animal and fish life startlingly strange. There we find the Cattleya schroederoe, a magnificent orchid with white flowers, which blooms about Easter time. But the dangers and vexations of a trip on the Orinoco, for instance, would hardly be believed. Miles and miles back from the coast in the district where the orchids are found the Indians are in a wild state and are foes to all white men. They lurk in the bushes along the banks of the river and shoot poisoned arrows at you if you happen to venture within range of their blow guns. The center of the stream is the only safe place. During the rainy season the mosquitoes swarm on the Orinoco in clouds, and sleep is next to impossible. Even the grass when you venture ashore is your enemy.—Harper's Weekly.

The Spoiled Children of the World.

Burmese children are the spoiled children of the world, according to V. C. Scott O'Connor. In his book, "The Silken East," he says that they are never punished by their parents, who universally adore them. They grow up in the open air with all the grace of young, unchecked life. "The sheer joy of life abides in them," says he, "and they seem to live perpetually at play in the village street, where they play a game of ninepins with the great seeds of a jungle creeper; in the monastery, where they lie upon the floor and scream out their lessons with lusty delight; in the river, in which they splash and plunge before they can walk; at the play, where they crawl about among the feet of the prima donna and the posing kings, and at the pagoda, where they hold flowers before them with faces screwed up to gravity, with laughter pent up behind it. And if there be any dispute about the good looks of their elders there can be none as to the prettiness of Burmese children."

Creatures of the Unfathomed Deep.

Such fierce carnivorous fishes as exist in the depths of the ocean are unknown at the surface. There is the "black swallower," which devours other finny creatures ten times as big as itself, literally climbing over its victim, first with one jaw and then with the other. Another species is nearly all mouth, and, having no power of locomotion, it lies buried in the soft ooze at the bottom, its head alone protruding, ready to engulf any prey that may wander into its cavernous jaws. There is a ferocious kind of shark resembling a huge eel. All of these monsters are as black as ink. Some of them are perfectly blind, while others have enormous goggling eyes. No ray of sunlight ever pierces the dark, unfathomed caves in which they dwell. Each species is gobbled by the species next bigger, for there is no vegetable life to feed on.

Repartee.

"If they ever get to writing the truth in epitaphs," said the man with the angry eyes, "I hope I may live long enough to write what will go on your tombstone."

"If they ever put the truth on 'em," retorted the man with the aggressive chin, "I hope I'll live long enough to read what goes on yours."—Judge.

Accent on the "Man."

"Well," he said during their quarrel, "I suppose you'll be wanting a divorce next?"

"Really," she replied coldly, "I don't see why it should be necessary in this case. A woman doesn't need a divorce unless she has been married to a man."—Philadelphia Press.

Red Rose Tea

"IS GOOD TEA"

It is good tea because it is made of the young, tender, juicy leaves of the tea plants of Northern India and Ceylon.

These leaves contain a large percentage of Theine, which is a mild stimulant and an aid to digestion.

This is why Red Rose Tea is good, not only while you are drinking it, but is good after you drink it.

FRANKFORD ORANGEMEN PASS A RESOLUTION

PROTESTING AGAINST THE EDUCATIONAL CLAUSES IN LAURIER'S AUTONOMY BILL.

At a meeting of L.O.L. No. 240, Frankford, the following resolution was ordered to be sent to the Premier and the Senate of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada:

1. That it is hereby resolved, that L.O.L. No. 240, composed of over one hundred members, being a non-political body and composed of all shades of politics, for the purpose of maintaining equal rights and constitutional freedom to all and favors to none, recognizing all nationalities and creeds so long as they are loyal British subjects, sustaining the Holy Bible and the British Crown:

2. That we view with distrust the attempt of the present Premier of Canada in forming the new provinces now about to be created in this Dominion by binding them forever under the un-British principle of the school clause in his Autonomy Bill now before the House of Parliament.

3. That we maintain that the newly-created provinces should have full and absolute control of their own Public schools and public lands.

4. That we have not forgotten the battle cry of hands off Manitoba in the election of 1896, when the Orangemen and Conservatives assisted in ousting the late Conservative Government out of office on a far less obnoxious measure of coercion than the one now being attempted to be forced upon the said provinces.

5. Now, when the eyes of all nations are watching the action of the Government of this fair Dominion of ours, we view with regret the misplaced confidence in the Premier, now showing his right about face position we now find him in, as compared with the attitude he took in 1896, viz., Hands off Manitoba.

6. That we heartily endorse the action of the Hon. Mr. Sifton in the position he has thus far taken in this matter, and that we would ask all M.P.'s to give this measure their most earnest consideration and weigh this matter well, independent or party, creed or nationality, doing unto others as they would wish to be done by before placing their votes on record for all time to come, that we may not have a repetition of our Manitoba experience.

7. That it is with the deepest regret that we see published through the press of our country (purporting to be) the action of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in consulting the Hierarchy in order to obtain the sanction of Mgr. Sbaretti to his school clause in his Autonomy Bill, which action we most thoroughly condemn in any Premier or Government in truckling to any creed or any nationality whatever as being decidedly un-British and disloyal to our national constitution.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

J. B. Lowery, P. P. Pettet, Byron B. Ostrom, committee.

Frankford, March 18, 1905.

BROKEN SLEEP. — TIRED NEXT MORNING.

Sleep not only rests, but builds up the body. Cut down the hours of sleep, and you cut down health in the same proportion. Rebuilding then ceases, nerves go to smash, you grow tired, weak and wretched. To restore sleep you must get more bodily strength, more nutritious blood, healthier nerves. Ferrozone solves the whole problem, makes you sleep soundly, gives endurance, vim, ambition. No more morning weakness — instead, the fire of youth will run in your veins, supplying abundance of energy and vigor. Witchery expresses the instant effect of Ferrozone; try it.

ROADS ARE AWFUL.

FARMERS ARE UNABLE TO REACH THE CITY AT PRESENT.

There was not an over plus of our country friends in the city to-day, and the chief reason for this is the condition of the roads. The soft weather of the past few days has rendered the majority of the roads in such a state that it is next to impossible to travel either with wheels or runners. There is still, throughout the country, a large quantity of snow upon the highways, but it is so soft that the horses break through and are liable to injure themselves. One party who came to the city to-day, in conversation with an Intelligencer representative, stated that it took him nearly two hours to come six miles. Whilst in some places the roads were about bare, at other points there were two and three feet of snow. The situation will not be improved until a warm rain clears the roads.

To-day's Market.

To-day's market, owing to the bad condition of the country roads, was not largely attended, and in consequence prices were rather high. The ruling price for butter was 28 and 30c per pound; eggs 18c per dozen. Poultry was also scarce and commanded a good price as our quotations show. In the various branches of the market, during the past week, there has not been much activity displayed. Some grains show a slight increase in price, but little is marketed here.

BOARD OF TRADE TALKS ON MANY LIVE TOPICS.

Report of an Energetic Committee Received—Good Prospect of Bridge Tolls Being Abolished for Two Days in the Week—An Interesting and Profitable Discussion.

There was an excellent attendance at the Board of Trade's special meeting last night, many citizens, who are not members, being also in attendance. The committee which had been appointed to look into bay bridge and transportation matters reported, and by their report proved that they were the right men for the job, for they certainly set about their work in business-like style. The said committee, by the way, is composed of Ald. Gordon, Mr. C. M. Reid, Mr. Chas. Clapp, Mr. C. B. Scantlebury and Col. Ponton. It was amply proved last night that there is room in Belleville for a good live Board of Trade, and that it has a mission to perform, and that mission is to look after local interests, not to discuss the stratagetical importance of the C.P.R. or other abstruse questions. The outcome of last night's deliberations made it fairly clear that, before many moons have passed, the experiment of having a free bay bridge on two days in the week will be tried.

Among those present were the President, Mr. C. M. Stork, Messrs. J. P. Thomas, P. J. M. Anderson, Col. Lazier, Ald. Gordon, Messrs. C. B. Scantlebury, Walter Alford, W. C. Reed, O. J. Bowell, M. Wims, J. F. Wills, C. M. Reid, C. S. Clapp, W. B. Deacon, F. S. Deacon, Ald. Sinclair and Mr. Kenney. The back benches contained quite a large-sized gathering, and Mr. Garrison, lessee of the bay bridge, was also present.

The President, Mr. Stork, announced that the meeting had been called to receive the report of the committee which had been appointed to look into matters relating to the possibility of the abolition of tolls on the bay bridge.

Ald. Gordon, chairman of the committee, said it had been felt for the last couple of years that the trade of certain classes of Prince Edward people was drifting away from Belleville, and he believed that the excessive bridge toll charged was responsible for it. The people of Prince Edward thought, when the bridge was built, that it would in time be made free. It cost, at the present time, Prince Edward people $5000 per year to come to this city. The residents of Picton had made and were making strong efforts to get the trade which formerly came to this city, and it was time for the merchants of Belleville to be alive to their own interests. Since the last meeting of the Board he had sketched a plan by which it was hoped to make the bridge free on two days in the week. Mr. Garrison, the bridge lessee, was present, but he could give no hopes of the fare being reduced. His contract, Mr. Garrison said, stipulated that he should keep up the price. The speaker's own idea was that, on Tuesdays and Thursdays of each week, all persons coming across the bridge should, on paying their fare, be given a ticket entitling them to a rebate at any store at which they made purchases in this city, the money thus expended to be subscribed by the merchants. This arrangement was not to cover stages or to take in fair days or holidays. The people of Prince Edward County, Ald. Gordon said, were greatly interested in this matter. Asked as to his estimate of what the cost would be Ald. Gordon said a former bridge lessee had said that $1000 per year would cover the cost for three days in the week, but Mr. Garrison did not think that would be enough.

Mr. Scantlebury thought the bay bridge proposition was the hardest one they had to deal with. Belleville had a good market, and the farmers would come here if there was no barrier. If some Belleville people had to pay the tolls the Prince Edward farmers pay they would think it was a great deal. He knew of one family which had paid $30 in tolls last year, and many Prince Edward people, who formerly came here, were now going to Picton to save toll. As to the purchase of the bridge, supposing it could be purchased for $50,000, that would mean, in interest, $2500 per year. He thought any ten prosperous business men in this city could afford to put up $250 per year. Some people had spoken to him of the rolling mills money, which was lying in the bank, and asked if that could not be applied towards the purchase of the bridge.

Col. Lazier thought the bridge matter was hard to solve. He thought that on three days of the week the fare might be reduced one-half and the bridge lessee guaranteed against loss.

Mr. Walter Alford agreed with Col. Lazier, and thought the committee deserved the thanks of the meeting for the trouble they had taken.

Mr. C. M. Reid said the matters spoken of by Col. Lazier had been thrashed out at the Committee meetings. Mr. Garrison had said he had no right to reduce fares on the bridge, but he was selling season tickets; how could he do that if he was not able to reduce the rates? The speaker thought a committee of the Board of Trade should meet the City Council and ask for a grant towards making the bridge free on certain days. The remainder necessary could be made up by the merchants. There was no matter of more importance than the lowering of the fares which it cost farmers to come to this city. It would not cost anybody very much to try some plan for six months. The Township of Ameliasburg, he had been led to believe, would give $1000 a year to have the bridge made free.

Mr. Garrison said he could not, on a former occasion, get the bridge owner to consent to a lowering of the fare on the bridge.

Mr. J. F. Wills thought the members of the Board of Trade and City Council should follow the example of the men of early days, who had abolished toll gates and made the county roads free. He thought that, to-day, the road across the bay bridge should be free, and that the city and Township of Ameliasburg should approach the matter together. The Government, Mr. Wills thought, should contribute towards the maintenance of the swing, that was where the expense came in. The Government should make a grant towards that. As to the advisability of the bridge being made free, there was no room for argument.

In answer to a question, Mr. Garrison said it would cost $1000 per year to run the bridge, outside of repairs.

Ald. Sinclair said the people of Belleville were not all of one mind as to the advisability of having a free bridge, and there were some who were not ready to be taxed for what they considered would benefit the Front St. merchants alone. The first thing to do, he thought, was to demonstrate to the people of Belleville that it would be a benefit to make the bridge free. This might be done for three months, so that people could see some practical result before they were asked to vote or act on the matter. The speaker thought they could make some arrangement with Dr. Sprague in the matter. Personally, he, as an alderman, would not vote to give $10 for the bridge unless some experiment had been made and the people shown beforehand how it was going to benefit the city.

A general discussion ensued for some time, during which Mr. C. M. Reid said that Mr. Garrison had the bridge leased till next October. He paid $4,500 per year as rent for the bridge.

Mr. Garrison, in answer to a question, thought he would lose about $40 per week by having the bridge free on two days. Then again, the wideawake farmers might make it a point to come to Belleville on free days, and sidestep the other days of the week.

Mr. W. C. Reid liked the idea advanced by Col. Lazier and Mr. Alford. The half-fare scheme, he thought, was the best.

Ald. Gordon thought that really the Prince Edward people had been paying the shot long enough. It was time, now, for Belleville merchants to meet them half-way.

Mr. J. Parker Thomas said if it were not for this city there would be hardly any bridge traffic at all. The bridge people should consider this, and not try to drive too hard a bargain.

Ald. Gordon said there were at present, in Prince Edward County, many travelling wagons which went from farm to farm selling goods. These people acknowledged that, if the bridge were made free, they might as well quit.

There was more discussion, and in the course of it Mr. Garrison said this was his third year as bridge lessee. There was no doubt in his mind that the traffic to Belleville was getting smaller. Last year his fall receipts were $100 less than the year before.

Mr. J. F. Wills thought a committee should meet Dr. Sprague, when he came home from California in a month or so, and in the meantime the Board of Trade and the Retail Merchants' Association should take the matter up and try to make some temporary arrangements.

Mr. Blackburn thought the merchants should get together and find out how much each one was willing to contribute towards the matter.

Rev. Mr. Geen, president of the Retail Merchants' Association, complimented the Board of Trade on its present showing, which showed that it was a live body. The Retail Merchants' Association were taking up the question of peddlers, whose actions, he said, were very injurious to regular merchants. He agreed with the views of Mr. Wills in regard to the bridge. He thought that the bridge being made free would benefit all Belleville people, whether they were merchants or not. The bridge should be a public highway, and the toll should be abolished just as tollgates were abolished. The Retail Merchants' Association, he was sure, would do all in its power to help the scheme along, and believed that, if all interested pulled together, success would come.

Considerable more discussion on the same line took place, nothing new being brought out, and finally Mr. J. F. Wills moved that the present committee, which had made such an excellent showing, be continued, and that they be given power to act.

This was agreed to.

Some discussion arose as to the relative merits of the Belleville and Picton markets, and

Mr. Clapp said a farmer from near Picton had told him that, for selling in quantities, the Belleville market was greatly in advance of Picton.

After a little more desultory conversation Mr. J. F. Wills moved that the Council of the Board of Trade and the Retail Merchants' Association meet and endeavor to devise some means to free the bay bridge on certain days and to interview the Government in regard to having it ultimately made a public highway, the outcome of the negotiations to be reported to the Board of Trade at the next regular meeting.

The motion was carried, and the meeting broke up, after Mr. C. B. Scantlebury had announced that he had twenty new members for the Board of Trade at its next meeting.

As to Net Fishing.

To The Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir, — Mr. Joe Templeton's letter re net fishing is all right, but he does not hit from the shoulder and say that it is the GILL NET that depletes the bay of the bass; nets surround every feeding resort of the bass. Mr. Black has none to sell because they are bought up by the small steamers plying the bay for that purpose. ANGLER.

"NATURAL HISTORY OF THE OYSTER."

PROF. RAMSAY WRIGHT'S LECTURE—OTHER ENJOYABLE FEATURES LAST NIGHT AT ST. AGNES' SCHOOL.

In addition to the central feature of the evening so delightfully spent at St. Agnes' School Hall last night, there was both music and dramatic art, Miss Stork favoring the audience with a much appreciated song, and five young ladies, all pupils of St. Agnes' School, exemplifying, in a very charming way, three scenes from Shakespeare's "As You Like It."

Professor Ramsay-Wright spoke with authority, and as an original investigator. He has for several years, during the summer, made special reports for the Dominion Government, and has also conducted research work in the Mediterranean. His natural history of the oyster followed that palatable and commercially valuable bivalve from its earliest germs to its complete development, ready for the market and the epicures.

Incidentally, many of the other sub-marine fish and plants were spoken of, and a very good general idea of life beneath the waves, with its many analogies to the battle of life waged by terrestial creatures were pointed out. The attack and siege of the starfish were vividly portrayed.

The formation of the pearl in the oyster, occasioned by a parasite, and its strange connection with a black duck, and a mussel, was interestingly explained.

The learned Professor pointed out that our Canadian oysters, especially the Malpeque, are the finest in the world, and not the least merit is that they are not handled many times before being marketed, while the oysters of Europe are nearly all cultivated and subject to several human handlings during the processes of growth, which is at the rate of about one inch each year.

There is, however, a danger of the natural beds becoming exhausted, unless some Government means are taken of both protecting them and of encouraging the formation of breeding grounds, as is done near Naples and in France. The value of the oyster, as a public asset, is very great.

Those who heard the lecturer's skilled analysis of the anatomy of this shell-protected bivalve, and who can now locate its heart, its liver, its kidney, its stomach and all the other wonderful organs, such as the gills, with their intricate structure, and the lips and muscles, will either have their love of oysters developed as a creation which is fearfully and wonderfully made, or will have their dislike intensified.

Most interesting and instructive were the old Roman inscriptions, showing how oyster culture was carried on 2000 years ago, and how, in Italy, oyster suppers formed the centre of social life. In the days of Roman luxury, however, the best oysters were brought all the way from England, from the shores of Kent, so that Italy and England in the gastronimic as well as in the matters of language, law and religion, acted and counter-acted upon each other.

A vote of thanks was moved by Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, seconded by Colonel Hendrick, U. S. Consul, and presented to the lecturer by Colonel Ponton, the chairman, who announced that the next and final meeting of the Graduates' Club, to be held on the 31st inst., would be distinctly Canadian and co-operative.

After the lecture Professor Ramsay-Wright and several gentlemen present were hospitably entertained by Dr. Perry Goldsmith.

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Chas. Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by all druggists.

Thunderer and Poet.

An early copy of Swin[illegible] "Poems and Ballads" volume [illegible] came into the hands of Dallas, then chief literary reviewer to the London Times, who, after ruminating on what we will call the pygmy poems, strode off to Moxon's with an ultimatum. Either, said he, let them withdraw the book or he would denounce it and destroy it. As they had no wish to be denounced or destroyed themselves, they preferred to accept the former alternative. John Camden Hotten brought out the book.—Fortnightly Review.

LIBERALS WIN VICTORY.

In Composition of Commission to Elaborate National Representation.

St. Petersburg, March 25.—The Liberals have apparently won a partial victory in the composition of the Bouligan Commission to elaborate the scheme for national representation under the Imperial rescript.

Planting themselves squarely on the demand for a chamber or Parliament elected by universal suffrage with control of the budget administration they insisted that a commission of bureaucrats could not be trusted to execute the popular will, and backed by the press they kept up their agitation for the participation of elected representatives. Powerful support was also furnished by the Zemstvos and Doumas, and the professional and educational bodies throughout Russia, which flooded M. Bouligan, Minister of the Interior, and the Committee of Ministers, with resolution of the same tenor and purpose.

The Liberals, if they could secure control of the commission, would vote proposition for the election of a constituent assembly which would pronounce for a constitution. The Government, however, in order to prevent such a contingency, only yielded the admission to the commission of "selected," not "elected," representatives. The Government's progress undoubtedly is to restrict the body created under the rescript to a chamber composed of representatives selected by the classes sitting in conjunction with the council of the Empire, but having only a consultative voice in legislation, thus preserving intact the principle of autocracy.

Unless future events force the Government's hand this progress will be adhered to. But the Liberals contend that even if the Government succeeds to the point of actually assembling such a chamber it would be an anomalous Government which would easily force its own demands and necessitate either its suppression or transformation into a real legislative assembly.

Recognize But One Certificate.

Toronto, March 25.—A special meeting of the Dominion Shorthorn Breeders' Association was held yesterday in St. George's Hall, W. G. Petit, of Freeman, Ont., in the chair, to take action on nationalizing the records, which will be done. They also passed a resolution removing the registrar's office to Ottawa; but decided to petition the Legislature to continue the office of secretary at the Parliament Buildings for the benefit of breeders who desire to register their stock in Toronto.

A CAUSE OF HEADACHE.

ONE VERY COMMON CAUSE, GENERALLY OVERLOOKED.

Headache is a symptom, an indication of derangement or disease in some organ, and the cause of the headache is difficult to locate because so many diseases have headache as a prominent symptom: derangement of the stomach and liver, heart trouble, kidney disease, lung trouble, eye strain or ill-fitting glasses all produce headaches and if we could always locate the organ which is at fault the cure of obstinate headaches would be a much simpler matter.

However, for that form of headache called frontal headache, pain back of the eyes and in forehead, the cause is now known to be catarrh of the head and throat; when the headache is located in back of head and neck it is often caused from catarrh of the stomach or liver.

At any rate, catarrh is the most common cause of such headaches and the cure of the catarrh causes a prompt disappearance of the headaches.

There is at present no treatment for catarrh so convenient and effective as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a new internal remedy in tablet form, composed of antiseptics like red gum, blood root, which act upon the blood and cause the elimination of the catarrhal poison from the system through the natural channels.

Miss Cora Ainsley, a prominent school teacher in one of our normal schools, speaks of her experience with catarrhal headaches and eulogizes Stuart's Catarrh Tablets as a cure for them. She says: "I suffered daily from severe frontal headache and pain in the back of the eyes, at times so intensely as to incapacitate me in my daily duties. I had suffered from catarrh, more or less for years, but never thought it was the cause of my headaches, but finally became convinced that such was the case because the headaches were always worse whenever I had a cold or fresh attack of catarrh.

"Stuart's Catarrh Tablets were highly recommended to me as a safe and pleasant catarrh cure, and after using a few fifty cent boxes which I procured from my druggist's I was surprised and delighted to find that both the catarrh and headaches had gone for good."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are sold by druggists at fifty cents per package, under the guarantee of the proprietors that they contain absolutely no cocaine (found in so many catarrh cures), no opium (so common in cheap cough cures), nor any harmful drug. They contain simply the wholesome antiseptics necessary to destroy and drive from the system the germs of catarrhal disease.

JULES VERNE IS DEAD.

Author of "Around the World in Eighty Days" Succumbs to a Stroke of Paralysis.

Amiens, March 25.—Jules Verne died at 3.10 p. m. yesterday: M. Verne has been subject to chronic diabetes, but it did not assume a critical aspect until March 10; since then he gradually failed and the end was hastened by a stroke of paralysis. Following the announcement of M. Verne's death, telegrams were received from many distinguished authors. It is expected that the burial will occur here. The municipality of Amiens, of which body the deceased was a councillor, will participate in the formal services.

M. Verne was stricken with apoplexy on Tuesday evening. Born at Nantes on February 8, 1828, he was one of the most prolific writers of the 19th century. Many of his conceptions were deemed fantastic when published, but were justified in later years by the developments of transportation and the progress of science. Especially was this the case with "Round the World in Eighty Days," which delighted the fancy of thousands of people who are now well advanced in life.

Among his works were the following: "Abandoned" "Adrift in the Pacific"; "The Archipelago on Fire"; "The Begum's Fortune"; "The Blockade Runners"; "The Castle of the Carpathians"; "Cesar Casebel"; "The Child of the Cavern"; "The Clipper of the Clouds"; "The Demon of Cawnpore"; "Dick Sans, the Boy Captain"; "Dropped From the Clouds"; "The Family Without a Name"; "Five Weeks in a Balloon"; "The Flight to France"; "The Floating City"; "From Earth to Moon"; "Round the Moon"; "The Fur Country"; "The Giant Raft, or 800 Leagues on the Amazon"; "The Cryptogram"; "Godfrey Morgan, a Californian Mystery"; "Hector Sewadae"; "Keraban, the Inflexible"; "The Lottery Ticket"; "Martin Paz"; "Mathias Sandorf"; "Michael Strogoff"; "Mistress Branican"; "The Mysterious Island"; "North Against South"; "Os's Experiment"; "Purchase of the North Pole"; "Round the World in Eighty Days"; "The Secret of the Island"; "Steam House"; "Across North India"; "Survivors of the Chancellor"; "Tigers and Traitors"; "Tribulations of a Chinaman"; "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea"; "The Vanished Diamond"; "Winter Amid the Ice"; "An Antarctic Mystery." He also wrote a comedy in verse entitled "Les Pailles Rompues," which was performed at the Paris Gymnase in 1850. This was followed by "Onze Jours de Siege," a three-act comedy, brought out at the Vaudeville.

Loss to the Nations.

Toronto, March 25.—"The death of Jules Verne is a real loss to the gaiety of nations. His fancy was as brilliant as it was prolific. He will be missed by readers of all ages, and particularly by the young.

Mexico Does Not Want Steamers to Call at Cuba.

Montreal, March 25.—The representatives of the Elder-Dempster Steamship Co. have telegraphed the Government of Mexico, requesting that the conditions of the tenders for the Canada-Mexican service be adhered to, and if they are not the company will abandon the project of establishing the service.

The Elder-Dempster Co. had all but closed negotiations, and had been given to understand that the Mexican Government had accepted the forms of tenders sent to the different companies. The company said yesterday that the tenders stated that a call might be made at Havana, Cuba, both on the way to and from the Mexican ports. The steamship companies considered that this call would greatly add to the business the line would do with Mexico, as there would be quite an amount of traffic between Cuba and Mexico.

On the other hand, the business that would be secured in Cuba for Canada would not clash with the business offering for Mexico. Last fall, when the Mexican Government sent two representatives to Ottawa, the latter accepted the forms of the tenders, but recently, on deciding to grant a subsidy of $50,000 gold, made it a condition that the steamers should not call at Cuba.

The Elder-Dempster Line had completed arrangements to start the service from Montreal on the opening of navigation, and had two steamers in readiness. Unless an early settlement is made by the Mexican Government, allowing the Cuban call, the Elder-Dempster interests say the steamers will be used on another line, and the inauguration of the Mexican service put back for a year.

BOY KILLED; MOTORMAN MOBBED

And Mother of Trolley Victim Fatally Injured by Fall.

New York, March 25.—A squad of extra police was summoned from a station in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn yesterday to rescue a policeman and the motorman of a surface car from an angry mob of 2,000 persons who were trying to punish the motorman for the death of a little boy. The child, Frederick Von Gilder, aged 4 years, ran in front of a car as it was passing through Park avenue, and was struck and instantly killed.

The body of the boy was then removed from under the car. When his mother, Mrs. Robert Von Gilder, saw the body lying under the wheels, she fainted and fell down stairs, suffering injuries from which it is feared she may not recover.

Fatal Electric Shock.

Montreal, March 25.—Constable Michael O'Connell was instantly killed in No. 9 Station yesterday by shock from an electric light wire carrying two thousand volts. O'Connell saw a lamp, with its wire attached, lying on the floor. Intending to hang the lamp to the ceiling—its usual position—he stooped down and lifted it. The wire was supercharged by crossing another wire exposed by the workmen, and the great voltage caused instant death. O'Connell was 22 years of age.

OUR EXPORT TRADE.

Reports of Interest About Australian and Jamaican Trade.

Ottawa, March 25.—The trade outlook in Australia is improving, according to a report received at the Department of Trade and Commerce from D. H. Ross, commercial agent for Canada in Melbourne. Australia's over-sea trade during 1904 amounted to $94,501,273, the largest on record. Small quantities of Australian butter have been marketed in Vancouver, and he believes that some is finding its way to Eastern Canada. The export of butter is being stimulated by cheap cold storage freights. These had recently been reduced from 1 1-2 cents to 1-2 cent per pound, giving a large extra profit to the producer. A report from the Canadian commercial agent at Jamaica states that the customs duty on matches has been lowered in order to break up a local monopoly. Competition is asked for.

THE WORST KIND.

After piles have existed for a long time and passed through different stages, the suffering is intense—pain, aching, throbbing, tumors form, filled to bursting with black blood.

Symptoms indicating other troubles may appear to a thoroughly pile-sick person.

This is when Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid, the only absolute pile cure, brings the results that has made its fame.

It will cure the most stubborn case in existence and a bonded guarantee to that effect goes with each package.

It is to be had for $1.00 at the drug store, or from The Wilson-Fyle Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont. 3

Prosperity and Progress

The volume of business transacted by the Mutual Life of Canada during 1904 exceeds that of any previous year. Over Five Million Dollars of new business was written, making the total Assurances now in force nearly Forty and a Half Millions of Dollars. All but Thirty Thousand Dollars of the new business was written within the Dominion. The Mutual Life of Canada is essentially a Canadian Company, and believes that good Canadian business is preferable to foreign business, which is secured at excessive cost and is often of poor quality. Good home business, and lots of it, means more profits to Canadian policy holders.

Found Man Dying in Marsh.

Windsor, March 26.—While hunting muskrats near the M. C. R. bridge in the River Rouge swamp about a half mile from River street, in Delray, a party of sportsmen noticed a body submerged in water nearly to the shoulders. One hand was clutching the weeds, showing that the man was trying to pull himself out. The man was still alive and breathing faintly. The man was rescued and taken to Cocotte's Clubhouse, where he seemed to revive, and while being carried upstairs gasped: "Let me catch my breath." He then became unconscious. Several hospital doctors worked over him, but it was of no avail, the man dying in the ambulance on the way to the hospital, probably of exhaustion.

Canada Tunnel Certain.

Chicago, March 27.—The Michigan Central Railroad is going to build a tunnel under the Detroit River between Windsor, Canada, and Detroit. The passage last week of a bill by the Dominion Parliament, granting the railroad permission to build the Canadian end of the tunnel, makes it certain the project will be carried out, and work will be commenced this summer.

The tunnel is to be strictly and solely the property of the Michigan Central. No other line will share the cost of the construction.

C. P. R. Trains Collide.

Montreal, March 27.—The C. P. R. train for Quebec and one from that point for Montreal crashed into one another at Louisville Saturday afternoon. As a result the engineer of the former train, Charles LaLumiere, had his legs broken and the passengers on both trains were badly shaken up. The engines of both trains were slightly damaged.

To Oppose Gouin.

Montreal, March 27.—Alex. St. Martin, a shorthand writer in the courts here, was chosen yesterday to oppose Premier Gouin in St. James. Mr. St. Martin is a Parent Liberal, but his candidature is not serious.

May be Peace in Six Weeks.

A Change Has Come Over the Spirit of Czar's Dream.

Affirmation is Made With Such Positiveness that it is Regarded as an Indication that Russia Has Information as to Japanese Terms and that She Can Agree to Them — Progress of the Retreat.

St. Petersburg, March 26.—The information contained in these despatches for over a week regarding the change in Emperor Nicholas' attitude concerning the advisability of making a pacific proposal to Japan is fully confirmed and in high quarters peace within six weeks is regarded as certain. The positiveness with which this is affirmed would indicate that the Government is already in possession of information as to the Japanese terms, which indicate a basis to which Russia can agree.

The exact situation is shrouded in mystery. The secret of what has been done and what is being done is zealously guarded. The Associated Press hears, however, from a source close to the throne that pourparlers are actually in progress in Paris, but possibly only of a preliminary character, and that Copenhagen may be the scene of the first exchanges between representatives of the two powers.

In this connection importance is being attached to the visit of M. d'Iswolsky, Russian Minister at Copenhagen, and Baron Rosen, former Russian Minister to Japan, to M. Bompard, the French Ambassador to Russia, on Tuesday. The parties to this conference refuse to admit that significance is attached to it. In the meantime the foreign office is silent.

Progress of the Retreat.

Tokio, March 27.—The following official despatch has been received here:

"Our Singking force reports that the enemy retreated from Singking toward Haulungchou, ninety miles northeast. Another report is that one squadron of the enemy's cavalry halted at Mienhauchien, on the Kirin road, in the district between Piyouan Pomen and Changtu, and in the vicinity of Taisiyel. At Kankoshi a few of the enemy's troops are appearing.

"Natives report 200 of the enemy's cavalry posted at Tishenkiu, nine miles north of Wanmasai, and 600 infantry and cavalry at Taotu, fifteen miles east of Wanmasai.

"Changtu reports a few troopers in the district twenty miles northward of Chinchiatun, twenty-three miles northeast of Fakoman. Reports do not trace the enemy from Kangpin, thirteen miles northwest of Fakoman, but some troops from Liaoyang and Wopeng are twenty-five miles north of Kangpin."

Japs Repulsed.

St. Petersburg, March 27.—A despatch from Gen. Linevitch says that the Japanese are cannonading the Russians from the neighborhood of Pultinas. Another despatch from the commander-in-chief says that the Japanese, after driving in the Russian outposts at Shementse, made a vigorous attack, but were repulsed. A third despatch from Gen. Linevitch says "Our cavalry forced the Japanese on our extreme left on March 23 back at Nanshentsi."

Quiet Along the Line.

Gunshu Pass, March 27.—Everywhere along the front there is complete and ominous quiet. No collisions were reported yesterday.

St. Petersburg, March 27.—Russia has lost 500,000 men in the war with Japan.

This astounding secret was revealed Saturday by Gen. Sakharoff, the Minister of War, who, stung by the criticisms of his conduct of the War Office, blurted out the facts in an official statement.

For his temerity in revealing to Japan and the whole world the terrible losses suffered by Russia, Sakharoff will be dismissed from his post by the Czar.

Nearly a Million Men.

Gen. Sakharoff shows that the Siberian railroad has delivered at Harbin from the date of the beginning of the war up to to-day 761,467 soldiers, 13,027 officers, 146,408 horses, 1,521 guns, and 351,000 tons of stores.

The publication of this article has created a sensation among military men and in public circles, many of the former censuring the general staff for disclosing valuable military secrets, and the latter finding from the figures a practical admission that the war has cost almost 500,000 men in killed, wounded, prisoners, and sick, as the whole effective force in the Far East is now believed not to exceed 300,000 men.

Grippenberg Relieved.

St. Petersburg, March 27.—An Imperial order relieves Gen. Grippenberg from the command of the second Manchurian army, but permits him to remain as aide de camp to the Emperor.

Gone.

Paris, March 27.—The Foreign Office confirms the news of the departure of the Russian warships from French waters of Madagascar several days ago.

Third Fleet Sails.

Suez, March 27.—The whole of Vice-Admiral Negobatoff's squadron has sailed southward.

Parade of 100,000 Prisoners.

Tokio, March 27.—The first of the Mukden prisoners arrived at Tokio yesterday en route to the Narshimo Barracks. They were transferred at the Omori Station, avoiding the city. There were no crowds and consequently no demonstration. The prisoners were poorly clad.

Correspondents as Prisoners.

Kobe, Japan, March 27.—Richard H. Little, of The Chicago Daily News, Francis McCullagh, of The New York Herald, M. Nadeau, of The Journal de Paris, and Baron Kriegistein, of The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, arrived here as prisoners of war on the Awa Maru yesterday. They will probably be kept in quarantine for some days and will be released soon. They say the battle of Mukden was a splendid affair on the Russian side, as well as on the Japanese. Several villages were taken and retaken four times. The newspaper men were surprised to learn the Russians had not asked for an armistice or made peace proposals. They say Russia's position in the field is hopeless; that Kuropatkin lost all his heavy guns and the railway line. Capt. Judson, of the American engineers, Surgeon-Colonel Harvard, also an American officer, and Capt. Byers, of the British army, who was recently attached at Vladivostock, were also captured after the battle of Mukden by the Japanese, and arrived here yesterday morning. Capt. Judson became ill when the Russians left Mukden, and Dr. Harvard did not care to leave him, hence their capture.

BOMB FOR WARSAW'S CHIEF

Baron Von Nolken Struck and Seriously But Not Fatally Wounded—Elaborate Revolutionary Conspiracy.

Warsaw, March 27.—A bomb was thrown into the carriage of Baron Von Nolken, chief of police of Warsaw, at 8 o'clock last night. He will recover.

The attack on Baron Von Nolken was the result of an elaborate conspiracy of the revolutionary party. Shortly before 8 o'clock an elegantly dressed man went to the police station at Praga, a large suburb of Warsaw, on the other side of the Vistula, and threw a bomb into the room of the station when the men assembled before going on duty. Six policemen were wounded and all the furniture, as well as one wall, were destroyed. The bomb thrower in trying to escape met a policeman and shot twice, wounding the officer in the stomach. The prisoner himself was wounded and has been placed in the hospital.

A telephone message was immediately sent to Baron Von Nolken at the City Hall, informing him of the outrage. Baron Von Nolken, accompanied by a police official, took a carriage and started immediately for Praga. When passing the castle where the Governor-General resides a man standing on the pavement threw a bomb at the carriage.

Received Full Charge.

Baron Von Nolken, who was sitting on the side nearest the assailant, received the full charge of the bomb, while his companion escaped unhurt. The coachman was thrown from the box and the carriage was smashed. Baron Von Nolken was removed to the City Hall and doctors were summoned, who found he had received injuries on the head, neck, arm and leg which are believed to be serious.

Baron Von Nolken, is very unpopular. He is hated by the masses of the Polish population, who hold him responsible for the sanguinary suppression of the disturbances here at the end of January. He has been here only a year, having come from St. Petersburg, where he was chief of the mounted division of the police.

Saturated With Revolt.

A revolutionary movement of considerable proportions is making itself manifest in connection with the industrial disturbances in the region around Siedlce, Bielsk, Vlodslavsk, Rodin and Lukov, south and southeast of Warsaw. The country has been flooded with proclamations of foreign and local origin calling for a rising in Poland and a revolutionary songs and addresses, the latter demanding the use of the Polish language in all the schools, administrative offices and courts. The population is said to be saturated with these tendencies, especially those of the Uniat sect Children are being kept out of school. Troops have been despatched to the vicinity of Kolsk, southeast of Warsaw.

Ballot Crimes.

(Brockville Times.)

Despite the fact that Rielly had confessed to his complicity in the bogus ballot-box conspiracy, some persons profess to be astonished at his being found guilty and receiving a year in prison.

This statement shows a curious code of morality. It is another demonstration that in Canada there is an element which looks upon electoral corruption and ballot rascality as a minor, venial offence. And yet the stealing or spoiling of ballots, and the organized rascality of elections, is just as bad as any other statutory crime. All our liberties are founded upon the free use of our votes, and to tamper with the ballot is to strike a desperate blow at that we hold most dear.

It is deplorable to read the following extract from the Kingston Whig in reference to Rielly's sentence:

There is great sympathy expressed for Rielly in all quarters, but blame is attached to him for not being represented by a lawyer at the preliminary investigation last December, when he told far more than was judicious, and all of which has been used so strongly against him. Had his evidence then been directed by a capable lawyer, it is thought that the outcome would have been much different. Rielly told all his connection with the affair and has suffered for it. The others implicated were more careful.

The Whig is supposed to represent fairly well the sentiments of decent people, and yet it says that Rielly is generally blamed—not for being a self-confessed criminal, but for confessing his rascality and neglecting to employ some slick lawyer who would have defeated the ends of justice by getting him off! Inferentially the others implicated are commended for their foresight in obstructing the ends of justice.

Public morality in Canada wants a lot of toning up until it learns to realize that ballot crimes are as bad as theft, forgery, arson and the like. The Vancouver Province, in writing of this affair, pertinently says:

It is essential that the impression should become fixed and strong in the public mind that there is no greater crime against society than tampering with the ballots of the people, and he who is convicted of such an offence should not be allowed to plead ignorance.

SOMETHING NEW AND IS DELIGHTED — FEELS LIKE A BOY.

Mr. M. N. Dafoe.

Mr. M. N. Dafoe, Manager The Dustless Brush Co., 29 Colborne St., Toronto, is telling his friends how he found health after years of illness and pain. He says:

"I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia for many years. I have been treated by local doctors and have taken nearly all the advertised remedies with only temporary relief, if any at all, but since unsing Anti-Pill I can eat anything the same as when a boy. I have been taking one Anti-Pill at bedtime for the past three months, and find they regulate both stomach and bowels. My old-time vigor has returned, so that my spirits are buoyant and temper normal. As a result of this unhoped for experience I am in duty bound to give all credit to this wonderful remedy, Anti-Pill."

Every druggist sells Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill, or a sample will be sent free by The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.

The remedy that cured Mr. Dafoe so completely is surely worth a trial.

Daily Intelligencer.

RUSSIA—THE CHRONIC BORROWER.

Russia's financial operations in France began when, on the initiative of Bismarck in 1890, she was shut out of the German market, where she had been a chronic borrower. Since then, through the adroit use of the Dual Alliance as a patriotic motive, and through the unfailing friendship of the great French banking institutions the Russian Government has been able to place in Paris new securities footing up, according to the general estimate, no less than $1,600,000,000. When the war broke out in February of last year, the existence of this French investment fund caused a good deal of uneasiness. Yet up to the present time, such apprehension has not seemed warranted. It is not to be inferred from this that Russia's friends on the Continental money market have taken no account of war uncertainties in their fresh advances. During the first few weeks of hostilities, the Paris bankers—at the suggestion, it was generally thought, of their own Government — refused to place a long-term low-rate Russian loan, and insisted on a compromise by which a three-year loan, at 5 per cent., was sold at 95 1-2. On these sufficiently inviting terms, the French market paid over $160,000,000 to Russia's treasury. As the end of 1904 approached, and her balances in outside markets again began to fall, Russia approached both Berlin and Paris with new applications, the result of which was that, during January, German bankers raised some $61,000,000 on a 4 1-2 per cent. loan placed at 90 1-2, and payable in six year, while Paris gave, as it would seem, some indefinite assurances that it would take $100,000,000. Hardly had Berlin's subscription to the January loan been made, when there occurred the collision between the people and the soldiers at St. Petersburg. Followed, as this has quickly been, by the general stirrings of discontent in Russia, by the overwhelming defeat of Kuropatkin, and now by the Czar's reputed declaration that he will not hear of peace, it is not strange that farsighted bankers should regard the occasion as inopportune for a further appeal to the French investing public.

WHITNEY'S EDUCATIONAL POLICY

It is now said in Toronto, according to a press correspondent, that Premier Whitney will make his educational policy his big feature.

This is to include a revolution in the management of the provincial university and a considerable change in the administration of the public school system of the province.

So far as the internal administration of the affairs of the Toronto University are concerned, they are to be solely in the hands of the president, whose powers and responsibilities are to be considerably enlarged.

The same principle is to apply to the public school system and the other educational interests of Ontario. This is to be by the adoption of Prof. Goldwin Smith's proposal for the establishment of a council of education in which the factor of politics will be reduced to a mininum.

Toronto University as part of Premier Whitney's educational programme is to be given generous financial support, while in the elementary schools the study of agriculture is to be promoted by every means possible.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Remember the Main
It's smashed again.

• • •

All Mayor Sulman's work in a diving suit gone for nothing.

• • •

There doesn't seem to be any help for it: that big pipe will have to go down under the bed of the river.

• • •

It should have been done years ago. Time after time the authorities have persisted in throwing good money after bad, but surely they have learned their lesson by this time. The main must be sunk beneath the river bed, even though the cost may be large. It is doubtful if enough money has not already been fooled away, in temporary repairs, to sink the pipe to a safe position, where it would require no more attention for years. The penny-wise-and-pound-foolish policy must surely stop. The people of this city cannot have their money thrown away and their insurance rating jeopardized by any more of such patchwork methods. If the city has not a man in its employ with sufficient ability to look after such things it should get one, and that at once.

• • •

Large numbers of people, we are told, stayed away from church last night because, if they went, they would have to cross Front street. And hardly anybody can blame them. One might travel from Dan to Beersheba and not come across another such a tough-looking or evil-smelling thoroughfare. Are the authorities of this city leaving all that dirt and filth on the street for fun, or spite, or what? It is high time something was done in the matter, before some kind of an epidemic starts.

• • •

A few "Public Library Notes," furnished by the Secretary, appear in another column. Among them appears the innocent announcement that,—

"Particulars as to the conditions under which a Carnegie library can be established are being obtained, and will be presented to the City Council for consideration shortly."

• • •

And the City Council, it is to be hoped, will turn the matter down so hard that the idea may never be revived in this city. If the people of Belleville are not satisfied with present library conditions let them make a united effort to better them, without going a-begging to a little galvanized Yankee whose favorite pastime is slandering Britain and sneering at Canada. Let us keep our independence, and let Carnegie keep his blood money. It is to be hoped that, when the matter in question is brought before the City Council, they will refuse to entertain the matter at all.

Whether the channel which was cut in the harbor did any good or not is now being discussed by many people. Some think it did; others say it was simply money thrown away. However, people who should know claim that the channel undoubtedly did work much benefit. One man who saw the jam come down at 2.30 this morning says that but for the channel the water would have backed up and flooded Coleman street again, like it did last year. One thing is sure, anyhow: Whether the channel prevented a flood or not, it was better to make an attempt, at the cost of a couple of hundred dollars, than to sit down and wait for whatever was going to happen.

People interested in hunting and fishing in this vicinity will probably agree that there is more truth than poetry in the following, from the Canadian Sportsman: "Many improvements could be made in the present fishing and game laws, and much improvement in the administration of the same. The putting of the law into effect has been done in a sort of spasmodic fashion. When the game warden decided to send out a few officers to look after the enforcement of the law, nine times out of ten their departure was chronicled in the daily newspapers; every man throughout the hunting district was warned that detectives were on the trail ready to punish those violating the law. This way of hunting ducks with a brass band rarely led to any good being accomplished; in fact, we have known where deer were repeatedly killed illegally within a few miles of where these officers were on the hunt. The hunting they were doing was trying to get a few deer for themselves and paying very little attention to the official duties of their trip."

The Bobcaygeon Independent hands the noble game of hockey the following body blow. It might be well for the youth of Canada to ponder over it: "The hockey season is over, and it is a good riddance. The game has become so associated with blackguardism, that it has ceased to warrant the support of any respectable person. As for the murderous assaults that are made on each other by many of the players, and the injuries they inflict on each other, that is not of much consequence. If they were more successful in killing each other it might be better. It is the exhibitions of dishonor, the contemptible meanness that is shown, the keen desire to take every unfair advantage, that has put the game beyond recognition of anyone having the least regard for the moral stamina of the community. It is in their games, and recreations, that youths and men show their true characters. That country is in a bad way, where selfishness, dishonor and disreputable conduct predominates in its games."

SPORTING NOTES.

In Ottawa it is said that the team which defended the Stanley Cup this year will never play together again. Harvey Pulford was brought out from retirement this past season against his will, and he is said to be out for keeps now. Frank McGee, for family reasons, will not play again, and it is doubtful if Billy Gilmour will be in line again. This will leave only Dave Finnie, Arthur Moore, Frank Smith and Harry Westwick. The first two are good for many more seasons, but the Rat and Smith are getting near the time when they will have to join the spectators and look back over a glorious past. They will both be playing lacrosse this summer, so it is to be presumed that they will play hockey next season. Ottawa, however, will be without Pulford and McGee, the mainstays of the team, if the weather indications read right at present.

The Toronto Marlboros were Saturday night defeated in the final game of the series with the Winnipeg Rowing Club by 5 goals to 3.

Globe: Trainer Chris Clune, who looked after the Pittsburgers this winter, arrived home on Saturday, and will go back early in September to train the Western University football team. He reports Pittsburg as enthusiastic as ever over hockey, but the International League was not a success. Pittsburg is too far away from the other towns in the league, and will go it alone next season, with four teams, all located in the Smoky City. Goalkeeper Winchester will remain there. He will play ball this season with the Oaklands, a strong local team.

CHECKERS.

The Scots the Champions.

Boston, March 25.—The Britons won the international checker tournament which concluded to-night after ten days' play, with a total score of 73 games won against 34 games won by the Americans. There were 283 drawn games, eight were cancelled on account of the illness of Dearborn, and two games between Stewart and Denvir were called off, making a total of 390 games played.

The Britishers early secured a commanding lead, which they increased from day to day. To-day's score was 7 to 5 in their favor, with 22 games drawn.

The feature of the tournament was the showing made by the five Scottish members of the British team. Out of the 194 games played, they won 46, lost but 2, while 146 games were drawn.

My Offer to Kidney Sufferers.

I will give you a full dollar's worth of my remedy free to try without cost or deposit or promise to pay.

I could not make this offer— a full dollar's worth free—if mine were an ordinary kidney remedy. It is not. It treats not the kidneys themselves, but the nerves that control them. The cause of kidney trouble lies ALWAYS in those nerves. The only way to cure kidney trouble is in strengthening and vitalizing and restoring these kidney nerves. That is exactly what my remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—does. Therefore I can make this offer with the certain knowledge that every kidney sufferer who make this trial will be helped.

When I say "nerves" I do not mean the ordinary nerves of feeling, thought, action. I mean the automatic nerves, which night and day, unguided and unseen, control and actuate and operate every vital process of life. These are the master nerves. The kidneys are their slaves. Your mind cannot control them. Your will cannot sway them. Yet when they are strong, you are well; when they are not, you weaken and die.

I have written a book on the Kidneys which will be sent when you write. This book explains fully and clearly how these tiny, tender "inside" nerves control not only the kidneys but each of the other vital organs.

I have made my offer that strangers to my remedy may know. It is not intended for or open to those who have used my remedy. They need no further evidence. But to those who have not heard, or hearing, may have delayed or doubted. I say "simply write and ask." I will hand you a full dollar bottle - and he will send the bill to me. There are no conditions—no requirement—simply write me to-day.

Tree That Turns to Stone.

There is a tree that grows in Mexico called the chijol, or stone tree. It is of enormous proportions, both in circumference and height. It has a number of branches spreading out widely and carrying leaves of a yellowish green color. The wood is extremely fine and easily worked in a green state. It is not given to either warping or splitting. The most remarkable thing about it is that after being cut the wood gets gradually harder, and in the course of a few years it is absolutely petrified whether left in the open air or buried in the ground. From this timber houses can be built that would in a few years become completely fireproof and would last as long as though built of stone.

The Lobster's Advantage.

The lobster has been endowed by nature with two gifts which go far to offset the evils attending his lot. One is the ability to fight early, often and all the time if necessary, and the other is the ability to grow a new member—an eye, a leg or a claw—whenever the original is lost in the fortunes of war or by reason of any domestic unpleasantness. It is these two gifts which enable him to grow up and become a useful member of society, most of his members being secondhand, so to speak, by the time he is really grown.

Bad Effect of Bitters.

Luckily absinth is not much drunk in England, but other bitters are, some that are only less injurious. Your readers should know that all bitter tonics, habitually indulged in, are apt to do harm—to depress, not exhilarate. Such tonics should be taken rather as medicines than as everyday drinks. You could bring yourself to melancholy by means of gentian, quassia or columba as well as by wormwood.—Doctor in London Mail.

EXPRESSIVE NAME FOR INDIGESTION.

J. S. McKeown Has Simple Remedy That is Guaranteed to Cure the Trouble.

No one word better expresses the condition of the sufferer from weak stomach or indigestion than "misery." The stomach is weak and cannot digest the food, so that there is no appetite, there are pains and griping in the stomach and bowels, the head and back ache, and the misery goes to every organ.

Strengthen the stomach and the digestive system by the use of Mi-o-na. This is the only stomach remedy known that gives relief by strengthening the stomach and digestive organs. It is this principle that makes it a certain cure for indigestion. Other medicines may give temporary relief by helping digest the food, but they do not strengthen the stomach, and that organ gets weaker and weaker all the time.

J. S. McKeown, the reliable retail druggist, has so much confidence in this remarkable remedy that he guarantees a cure, or the money will be refunded. Mi-o-na costs but 50 cents a box. Ask to see the strong guarantee given with every box.

Mi-o-na is in tablet form and should be taken before each meal. Other remedies for stomach troubles and indigestion are taken after the meal, and decompose the good food you eat, but Mi-o-na used before eating strengthens the stomach, soothes and heals all irritation and inflammation, enriches the blood, and puts the stomach in such a healthy condition that it will take care of the food itself and there will be no pain and suffering.

OUR ARCTIC EMPIRE.

Commander Low Describes His Travels in Esquimaux Land—Enormous Northern Archipelago—Hudson Bay Navigation.

It is farther from Toronto to the northern limits of Canada than it is to Vancouver. From the international boundary to Ellesmere Land is 2,800 miles. The Arctic Archipelago has been mainly explored by British seamen, from Sir Martin Frobisher, Queen Elizabeth's old captain, in 1576, and Henry Hudson, after whom the bay was named, in 1610; Parry and Ross, in 1818; Franklin and others, down to Commander Low, who returned last year, and gave some account of his travels the other night to the members of the Canadian Club in Toronto. Canadians, he said, would welcome scientific exploration there, but wished it distinctly understood that such researches would not give possession of the land explored. Canada was to be congratulated on holding what she had inherited from Great Britain by the discovery of her sons.

Mr. Low displayed a most interesting and artistic series of lantern slides from photographs taken in the Arctic Circle, one of the pictures showing the planting of the flag on Ellesmere Land. There was no agriculture in that latitude and never would be. But in Ellesmere Land the ice-cap was confined to the interior, and on the lowlands and along the coast there was sufficient vegetation to feed herds of musk ox, caribou, Arctic hares and other creatures. There were also coal deposits. On Baffinland the Laurentian and Huronian measures contained the same minerals which enriched Ontario, and a mica mine there even now was paying a handsome profit. During the winter the Neptune, Commander Low's vessel, lay alongside an American whaler. "They have been fishing in those waters for forty years, and it is time we were looking after our own," he remarked.

Many of the pictures illustrated Esquimaux life, several showing the building of their snow-houses, which have to be vacated every month because they sink in the water, and for sanitary reasons. It is quite light inside these huts built of snow-blocks. The temperature is always below freezing, but the people are hardy, and for two years the babies wear no clothing. Cooking is done with an earthen lamp formed of a shallow pan. Fat or blubber is placed in this, and all round the circular edge a wick of powdered moss is placed. The pan grows hot enough to melt the fat and there is no difficulty about keeping it going.

The greatest cold experienced was 54 degrees below zero. Usually it was 25 or 30 degrees below. In summer the temperature was 45 or 50 degrees. In two hours two boats caught 1,000 fish weighing 5,000 pounds. These were Arctic salmon, better than the British Columbian variety. The whalebone is the most valuable part of the whale. The "bone" is the fringe from the upper jaw, and grows, when most valuable, over ten feet long. One whale will yield as much as 1,800 pounds, and it is worth £3,800 per ton.

Mr. Low said he was not there to discuss the Hudson's Bay passage, but it would save 1,000 miles railway haul from Regina to Liverpool, which, at half a cent a ton per mile, ran into millions. In ten years there would be freight enough for both routes, and tramp steamers, he believed, could take care of the trade. Navigation was fit for these for three months and a half. The narrowest part of Hudson's Strait was 30 miles wide, and, owing to its shelving soundings, was safer than the St. Lawrence. Ships should not be there till July 20, though the ice breaks up earlier. The strait was open till October, and no ice formed till December, but the fogs late in the season were dangerous.

"There would be no advantage to the east, or to Toronto or Montreal, but I think, we are patriotic enough," he concluded, "to approve of anything that is of advantage to our brothers in the Northwest. Anything that adds to their wealth will benefit the whole of Canada."

Last Survivor of Franklin Expedition.

Mr. John Calder, who died a few days ago in a modest little home in Mercer County, Ill., was the last survivor of the crew that went to the Arctic regions in search of Sir John Franklin. He was an Englishman, born in 1819. In 1840 he went to sea, and after a cruise around the world he returned to England. About that time an expedition, headed by James Ross, was organized to go in search of Franklin. Calder volunteered. The trip was without result. In 1850 a second expedition was arranged and again Calder volunteered. He was made captain of the forecastle of the good ship Investigator. The vessel was caught and held by icebergs, and for a year Calder and his men worked and hoped for her release, but in vain. In 1852 they abandoned the ship and tramped across the ice fields to Melville Island. Here they left papers to guide any rescue party that might happen to come that way. In the meanwhile they had run short of provisions and had suffered terribly from cold and hunger, many having died.

At last, in 1854, they were picked up by two vessels, the Resolute and Intrepid, that had been sent in search of them. But they had not sailed fifty miles when the fleet was caught in an ice floe. All through the winter they stayed there. In the summer of 1855 the ships were abandoned and the luckless adventurers made their way on foot to Point Beachy. By a chance good fortune the steamer North Star found them there and took them back to England. Calder had been absent five years. For his pluck the British Government presented him with two gold metals.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

REAPED AS HE SOWED.

The Crop That Was Raised by Meissonier's Clever Gardener.

Meissonier, like many other celebrities, had a passon for gardening. His gardener, an accomplished botanist, knew to perfection the seeds of every plant, and his master had often tried in vain to throw him off his guard.

"This time I have him," the artist remarked to a party of friends at the dinner table. And he showed them a packet containing the dried roe of a herring. He then sent for the gardener.

"Do you know this seed?" Meissonier inquired.

The gardener carefully scrutinized the grains.

"Why not?" he said at last. "They are the seeds of the 'Polpus finsamus,' a very rare tropical plant."

"How long will they be coming up?" Meissonier asked, with a chuckle of suppressed exultation.

"About a fortnight," was the reply.

Two weeks later the guests were again assembled at Meissonier's table, and after dinner the gardener was announced.

"M. Meissonier," the man said, "the seed has just come up."

"Ah, you surprise me!" the artist exclaimed as he rose and led the way into the garden to examine the botanical phenomenon.

The gardener lifted a glass shade and disclosed to view a small bed with three rows of pickled herrings' heads peeping out of the earth. Everybody laughed. Meissonier dismissed the gardener on the spot, but took him on again next day.

With the Aid Of Whittier

By OTHO B. SENGA.

Copyright, 1904, by Otho B. Senga

"Aren't you glad you came, Malcolm?"

The girl's voice was sweet and joyous, and she looked with a bright smile into her companion's somewhat gloomy face.

"I suppose you've been very happy here, Winifred," avoiding a direct reply.

"Indeed I have," enthusiastically. "They've been the four happiest years of my life. Weren't the class day exercises beautiful?"

"Very pretty, Winifred," absently.

His gaze was fixed on the laughing throng—the easy, debonair young men in evening clothes, the girls with their white dresses and fluttering ribbons, flitting about like gay colored butterflies beneath the swinging Japanese lanterns, congratulating, chatting, moving on again in seemingly endless procession.

"What is the matter, Malcolm? Did you think it was silly—the 'daisy chain?'"

"No, Winifred, I thought it all very interesting, and you girls in your white gowns looked very beautiful."

"But there is something, Malcolm," persisted the girl, "and you haven't said that you are glad that you came. It is a long journey to take just to attend the graduation of—of an old friend, and I'd like to feel that you are glad you came. You do not act as if you are happy."

"I am glad I came, Winifred, for I've learned many things, but I can't truthfully say that the knowledge makes me happy."

The cluster of roses at the girl's breast trembled like things endowed with sentient life, but the girl only said gently, "Well?"

"It is not well," he answered in a voice harsh with repressed emotion, "not for me. When you left Bloomington four years ago we were engaged—a tentative sort of an engagement, I admit, which your parents allowed because they knew that with your disposition opposition would only make you more determined and because they were wise enough to look ahead—to this. They knew then what I begin to see now," bitterly.

The girl made no answer. She hardly seemed to hear the harsh, bitter tones with the half hidden strain of anguish.

"For four years you have lived like this," a slight gesture indicating the fairy land before them. "Your daily association has been with persons of refinement and culture. It is all about you, everywhere, in the very atmosphere. While I," he laughed gratingly—"I have improved my mind and elevated my tastes by herding with a lot of ignorant Scandinavians. I've hardly spoken to another person."

"But you've been successful, Malcolm," with gentle sympathy.

"In what?" shortly.

"Why, father said"—

"Oh, I know what he said. I know his acceptation of the word success. I've made money. I'm the richest young man in the county. My farm is a model. It is conceded that I can get more work and better results from my men and with less dissatisfaction than any other man in the state of Kansas. But what am I? A boss, the leader of a gang of fifty Scandinavian farm laborers. Except for the few paltry dollars I have made I might as well be one of them. I'd be just as fitting a mate for you. When I listened to your valedictory I heard the tolling of the knell of all my hopes. Any one of my men would have understood as much of what you were saying as I did."

"Malcolm Bell, how utterly absurd and untrue!"

He hurried passionately on, as if she had not spoken.

"I can make money. That is a quality your father can understand and appreciate. He might be willing perhaps to allow the engagement to stand, but your mother—she is looking for you now," he added, hastily drawing the girl farther back into the shadow of the group of elms.

Winifred looked across the brilliant campus. Her mother was coming, and in her heart Winifred knew that Malcolm's unuttered words were true. In the eyes of the ambitious matron this young man's standing was very far from the heights for which she had destined her beautiful daughter. She had forgotten the day twenty-five years ago when she had given her hand to the young carpenter whose yearly earnings then would scarcely have sufficed to purchase one of the rings she wore now upon her plump white fingers.

"Let us walk in the other direction," said the girl calmly. "I do not care to go with mamma just now—and I think," she added naively, "mamma will enjoy herself better if she doesn't find me."

"You're good to stay with me at all, Winifred," said the young fellow brokenly, "and I'm a brute to intimate anything savoring of a lack of respect for your parents, but your mother told me this morning that she meant to take you abroad next year; that there was no need of a girl with your beauty and brains marrying a 'mere American,' especially since your Uncle Joshua's death had made your father a millionaire."

"Poor Uncle Joshua!" sighed the girl tenderly.

"Buying a title with your beauty and your father's money!" hotly. "It made me terribly angry, Winifred. I know how unworthy I am, and I am going to give you up. But to think of your being snatched away"—

The girl laughed a low, sweet laugh of infectious merriment.

"Malcolm, you are too funny! It is just as you were when we were children. You are willing to give away your cooky, but you won't have some one come up and grab it."

"I suppose I don't say things right, Winifred. I haven't a college education, you know"—the hurt showing in face and voice. "I'm not willing to give you up, but I'm going to—for your own happiness. You will meet many other men far more worthy of you than a rough farmer like me. But, oh, Winifred, there'll never be any one who can love you more than I do! Winifred, Winifred!"

He made no attempt to touch her. On the contrary, he drew farther away, as if to emphasize the gulf he felt must lie between them.

For a few minutes neither spoke; then the girl said gently and with seeming irrelevance, "Malcolm, do you recall Whittier's idyl of 'Bearcamp Water?' You recited it once in school."

"I have forgotten. What was it like, Winifred?" She evidently wants to leave an unwelcome subject as soon as possible, he thought, cut to the quick by her seeming indifference.

"One stanza has a particular bearing on the present situation," she said slowly after a pause.

His heart thrilled at her voice, but his treacherous memory gave him no clew to her meaning.

"Could you repeat the stanza, Winifred?"

Her face paled, then flushed painfully, but she looked bravely up into the somber face and repeated with quivering lips:

> "Nor frock nor tan can hide the man,
> And see you not, my farmer,
> How weak and fond a woman waits
> Behind the silken armor?"

Back from his schoolboy days came the next line, and he caught her in his arms with a low cry of happiness.

"Is the next true, Winifred? Can you say that, too?" he whispered.

"It has always been true," she answered softly. "The years have made no change in my heart, and I love you."

Ideals and Home Life.

A point was well made by Mr. Edward Howard Griggs at the conclusion of a lecture on "How to Attain Our Ideals." He had paused for questions from the audience, and one man said something to this effect: "Yes, these are very fine things you have been saying to us. Those of us who can see at all what you mean are eager to bring it into realization. But we are often terribly hampered. What can you say— ~~what hope~~ have you to offer—to a woman who, herself capable of holding these ideals, is tied to a man who is utterly incapable of any higher conception than that of bodily comfort?"

"You have touched," said Mr. Griggs, "upon a tragedy so profound that I have no words in which to answer you." A silence fell upon the great audience. Presently he broke it: "But this I can suggest, that very often those who most quickly and intensely grasp ideals are unwilling to take the necessary steps to realize them. There are orderly means to the attainment of every ideal. It is never reached at a bound. Only by patiently establishing each step before it goes on to the next can the human spirit reach its goal."—Marion Foster Washburne in Harper's Bazar.

Old English Gardening.

It is a little curious to think that even as far back as the middle ages a great quantity of "garden stuff" was imported into England from the continent. Although our ancestors were famous in those days for their salads and greens, they knew nothing about the cultivation of edible roots until the reign of Henry VIII. Up to then such things as carrots, turnips and artichokes were sent from Flanders, and special messengers were sometimes dispatched to bring back supplies for the royal table. Among the green vegetables most popular in Tudor days was "Good King Henry" or "Mercury Gooseloot." Those who would like to have a really old fashioned vegetable in their gardens are advised to try "Good King Henry." Nothing could be easier to grow, and as it is a perennial plant there is little or no trouble connected with it after it has once been put in the ground. The young leaves are used in the same way as spinach, making an acceptable, mild flavored dish, and the young shoots are cut under the ground and served up like asparagus.—London Chronicle.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

NICHOLAS UNCLOTHED.

(Mark Twain in North American Review.)

After the Czar's morning bath it is his habit to meditate an hour before dressing himself.—London Times correspondence.

The Czar (viewing himself in the pier glass)—Naked, what am I? A lank, skinny, spider-legged libel on the image of God! Look at the waxwork head—the face, with the expression of a melon—the projecting ears—the knotted elbows—the dished breast—the knife-edged shins — and then the feet, all beads and joints and bone sprays, an imitation X-ray photograph! There is nothing Imperial about this, nothing imposing, impressive, nothing to invoke awe and reverence. Is it this a hundred and forty million Russians kiss the dust before and worship? Manifestly not! No one could worship it. What is it that they worship? Privately, none knows better than I: it is my clothes. Without my clothes I should be as destitute of authority as any other naked person. Nobody could tell me from a parson, a barber, a dude. Then who is the real emperor of Russia? My clothes. There is no other.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

ABOUT "BLOOD BITTERS" AND "TONICS."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of 'tonics,' 'pills' and 'cathartics,' which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both: they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.

Lightning Takes Lives.

Guthrie, Okla., March 27.—Violent storms throughout the territory Saturday have resulted in four deaths and numerous injuries to other persons.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet." Etc.

Nina glanced towards the glass box, but the man had gone away for a moment. She turned her head away as if she had not heard, but the fatuous young fellow approached her with what he considered an ingratiating smile and offered his arm.

"Come along with me," he said. "Come outside where we can talk, miss."

Before he could say another word or touch her, there came a light, firm step along the passage, and a gentleman hurried down it. He was a young man, with a handsome and pleasant face, in which a pair of frank and boyish blue eyes were the most noticeable feature. They were quick, as well as good-looking eyes, and he saw, in a moment, what was going on. Without a word his hand fell on the man's shoulder and he swung him round towards the doorway as if he were a skittle, and not a heavy one at that. The man looked round with an angry oath, but it died on his lips, and with a sullen "All right, my lord!" he went unsteadily on his way.

The young fellow was about to follow, when, hesitatingly, he stopped and raised his hat.

"I'm afraid the man was making himself a nuisance," he said, and his voice was as frank and pleasant as his eyes. "You—you have not been frightened, I hope?"

"Not in the very least," Nina replied. "He had only spoken a few words before you came up. But I am very much obliged to you for sending him away."

She did not color, or seem a whit embarrassed, but met his gaze of frank but quite respectful interest with the conventional ease which is the lady's birthright.

"I am very glad," he said, in the tone in which one addresses an equal. "Are you waiting for anyone? Shall I go back and bring them up?"

"No, thanks," said Nina. "I am waiting for—ah, here she comes!"

He looked round and saw Polly hurrying down the passage.

"Oh, Miss Bainsford!" he said, and he raised his hat. Then he added, after a pause: "This lady might wait in the green-room, Miss Bainford."

"Oh, thank you, my lord!" said Polly, gratefully.

"Thank you," Nina also said, "but I shall not come again."

He raised his hat once more and left them.

"Well?" said Polly as they got into the cab. "Aren't you going to ask who that was?"

"I wasn't, but I will," said Nina with a smile. "Whoever he is, he was very kind. A stupid man spoke to me and—"

"Lord Sutcombe knocked him down! It's just what he would do!"

"It's just what he didn't do. I'm glad to say," said Nina, smiling. "That would have been too severe a punishment for a piece of unconscious impertinence."

Polly stared at her. "Lor'! I should have thought you'd have been glad if he'd done it! What a strange girl you are! But I see! Of course you wouldn't like the fuss. Yes; that was Lord Sutcombe. He's the son of an earl or a duke, or something."

"And what may a son of a duke be doing behind the scenes at the Momus?" asked Nina, but without any great interest.

"Oh, they say he's backing Mr. Harcourt—got a share in the theatre. And he's fond of the stage; there's a good many swells like him; they're never happy unless they're behind. But he's not a stage-struck idiot like some of them. He's a gentleman, and all right, and doesn't spend his time flirting with every girl about the place. Didn't 'The Betrothed' go well to-night, dear? Did you hear the hand I got in that last speech of mine? And the 'House Full' boards were up quite early. Oh, how glad I shall be when the new play's finished! If you'd tell me what the man was like, I'd get Mr. Harcourt to discharge him."

"Then I certainly sha'n't tell you," said Nina. "Don't think any more of it. It won't happen again."

Lord Sutcombe walked away from the theatre briskly, but suddenly he stopped, and, with a gesture of impatience, strode back.

"Who was the young lady who was waiting for Miss Bainford?" he asked of the doorkeeper.

"That was Miss Wood, sister of the author of the first piece, my lord," he replied. "I've heard that one of the supers has been annoying her. I'd only turned my back for a moment. I'll find out who it was, my lord—"

"No matter," said his lordship. "For the future take Miss Wood to the little room adjoining the green-room."

"Yes, my lord," said the man. "I'm sorry it should have happened—"

Lord Sutcombe nodded and went out again. His rooms were at Eversleigh Court on the Embankment, and all the way he thought of Miss Wood with a persistence which annoyed him.

"A beautiful girl—and a lady. She ought not to be hanging about a stage-door. Miss Wood—then the brother must be a gentleman. But that's not in any way remarkable; that first piece is full of refinement, and the touches of a cultured brain Should like to see him. I wonder whether Harcourt knows more about them—him—than he pretends."

He was still thinking of Nina as he went up the stairs to his flat, and entered a handsome and delightfully furnished drawing-room. On a settee by the fire a young girl was lying with a book in her hand. She was his sister, Lady Vivienne, and an invalid. A fall from a horse, when she was a child, had injured her spine, and consigned her for the greater part of her time to a couch. She could walk only a few yards with assistance, and that assistance she preferred from her brother. Between the two existed an extraordinary affection which dated from their childhood and deepened every day. Vivienne regarded her brother as the handsomest and the best man in the world, and Sutcombe was sure in his own mind that Vivienne was the sweetest and noblest of her sex. They had lived together in a London flat, in a hotel on the Riviera, at a cottage up the river, since the death of their parents, and, strange to say, Sutcombe had no secrets from her, from which fact the reader will gather that he deserved Polly's description of him; for the man who can lay his life open before his sister must possess a pretty clear record.

"Home early, Sutcombe. I'm glad!" she said, smiling at him through eyes that were a reflection of his own. "I thought you were going to a dinner at the Savage?"

"I was, but I changed my mind," he said, standing before the fire and looking at it absently. Her soft eyes rested on his face with gentle scrutiny for a moment or two, then she said, in a low voice:

"What is it, Sutcombe?"

He started slightly and smiled at her rather shamefacedly. It did not occur to him to evade the question, to conceal the cause of his preoccupation.

"Something that happened to me to-night," he said; and he told her of the little adventure.

"Such a beautiful girl, Viv! Coming along I tried to describe her to you; but I can't. For the life of me I couldn't tell you the color of her eyes; grey, I think, or violet. And her voice—somehow it reminded me of yours; you don't mind?"

"Not in the least, for I can gather that it was a nice one. And a lady, Sutcombe?"

"Emphatically so!" he returned, promptly. "'I knows a lady when I sees her.'"

"Did she look—poor? I mean, was she shabbily dressed?" asked Lady Vivienne going to the—feminine—point.

"No; certainly not. She was very plainly dressed, but in perfect taste, and like a lady. I labor the point, don't I? But what I mean is that she was as quietly dressed as any other lady, and that there was nothing suggestive of the theatre about her."

"She may be poor and yet dress with refinement and taste," said Lady Vivienne, shrewdly. "And her brother is the author of the first piece, and is going to write the new play. And a cripple—poor fellow!"

She did not sigh with self-pity, but Sutcombe drew a little nearer and laid a hand gently on her head.

"I should like to see him—and her, of course," she said, acknowledging the caress of his hand by a touch of hers.

He shook his head. "So should I. But I don't see how it could be managed. Viv, you know that I—and you, too—hate intruding on other people. I mean that because this lady is connected with the theatre there is no reason why one should force one's self on her—them. And, to tell you the truth, I don't think it would be easy, any easier, indeed, than it would be for them to intrude upon us. By George, not so easy, for she was, in a way, more dignified and—and aloof than you are, Viv!"

"You are very interested in—them, Sutcombe," she said very softly.

He colored and bit his lip, but he did not turn away from her.

"I'm so interested in—let's be candid, Viv!—her, that I can't get her out of my mind. I'd give a great deal to see her again."

Lady Vivienne was silent for a moment. She knew her brother as few sisters know their brothers, and was aware that Sutcombe was not a susceptible man; indeed, that he was rather unimpressionable. There had been a fleeting "fancy" or two in his life, but it had been a fancy only and had been as transient as it had been superficial; he had never displayed an interest in any woman as the interest he was confessing to-night. Had he really fallen in love at last; had he at last met the "one woman in the world?" she asked herself, and if so, how would it be with him? A girl he had met at the theatre! With a sister's loving anxiety she had always been "afraid" of Sutcombe's connection with the stage; plenty of good women are to be found there, but there, also, are Sirens who have wrecked many a fair barque and devoured the crew body and bones. She leant on her arm and gazed at the fire musingly.

"You will see her again, Sutcombe?" she said at last, almost prophetically.

"I shall try," he said. "I must. Don't laugh at me; but you won't, Viv—"

"No," she said in a still voice, and with a smile that was pathetic. "I am more likely to—cry. Forgive me, dear! It is only jealousy, the jealousy of the poor girl who has had you to herself for so many years."

"And who will have me to herself for very many more," he said in a low voice. "What nonsense we are talking, Viv! I shall forget her before the morning."

"I hope so!" she responded fervently; "for—for, Sutcombe, dear—a girl at the theatre—"

"No!" he said, quickly. "She has nothing to do with the business— By George, you're right, Viv! She is connected with it, is—is—out of our set! Oh, I know all you're thinking, and—of course you're right. We'll say no more about her."

And, of course, five minutes afterwards he came to the door from the adjoining room where he had been smoking and returned to the subject.

"See, here, Viv. It's not at all unlikely, as you say, that they are badly off. I might help her brother in the matter of this play, might see that he gets fair terms from Harcourt—"

"And so earn the sister's gratitude," she said, with a smile. "Come in here and sit down, and let us talk about her. It's better than your brooding by yourself in there, dear!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

Sutcombe said no more about Nina, but, like the famous parrot, he thought a great deal; and he found it imperatively necessary to go down to the theatre very often; one knows that business must be attended to. But though he hovered about the stage entrance and doorways at the beginning and close of the play, he did not again see the girl whose face and voice haunted him; and it is probable—though not very likely, for Nina's face was not one to be easily torn from one's memory—that he might have forgotten her, if the long arm of coincidence had not been stretched out in grim irony to draw closer the links of the chain.

It chanced a week later that Nina was standing on the edge of the curb, in the middle of Bond Street, waiting to cross. She was not in any hurry, for she was thinking of the last act of the play; and she was looking absently before her, when she felt something brush past her skirt, and saw a child attempt to run between the carriages. It was a London urchin, of the usual type, and there is no doubt that he would have threaded his way safely amongst the horses if an old lady who was standing beside Nina had not uttered an exclamation of terror and apprehension. The child heard it, turned to look, having not the faintest suspicion that he was the cause, and in another moment he would have been under a victoria if Nina had not sprung forward and hauled him out of the way.

The coachman had pulled up his horse almost on its haunches and, very red in the face, was trying not to swear; and Nina heard a very soft and sweet, and at that moment a very anxious, voice exclaim:

"Oh—the child! Have you run over it?"

By this time Nina had got the urchin on the pavement, and she looked up and saw that the enquiry had come from a very pretty, delicate-looking lady in the victoria. The usual crowd and policeman almost shut Nina and the rescued one from Vivienne's view, but at last she caught Nina's eye and beckoned to her anxiously. Nina went to the carriage, still half consciously grabbing the boy.

"Oh, is he hurt? How brave of you! How very brave!" said Vivienne, fervently. "Is he hurt?"

"No, I don't think so," said Nina. "If he would only leave off crying—"

"Will you—would you mind—bringing him in here?" asked Vivienne, timidly. "I—I am an invalid and cannot get out, or I wouldn't trouble you."

Before Nina could reply the boy seized so good a chance of escaping an interview with his natural foe, the policeman, and of his own accord, slipped into the victoria.

"There is nothing the matter with him," said Nina, and with a slight bow she was turning away, when Vivienne said eagerly, almost imploringly:

"Oh, won't you come in, too? Do, do, please! I—I am not at all sure you are not hurt. I live quite near here—if you would come."

Nina hesitated a moment, then got in; the policeman took Lady Vivienne's address from the coachman, and the victoria drove off.

The boy was still rubbing his eyes with his dirty fists, but he was eyeing the two ladies with monkey-like cunning, and, shrewdly concluding that he had landed in clover, kept up an assumption of much grief and tribulation.

"Poor little fellow!" said Vivienne, leaning forward and stroking his arm rather gingerly. "If he would only tell us whether he is hurt or not!" Then she turned her attention to Nina. "How quick you were! It was like—like a cat springing for a kitten—but that sounds rude!" as Nina's eyes twinkled. "And how strong, as well as brave, you must be to be able to lift so big a boy! And the horse did not touch you?"

"Not in the least," said Nina. "And now, if you will kindly stop the carriage I will get out—and take this young gentleman with me."

But at this Vivienne looked very hurt and injured.

"Oh, please don't! Please come home with me. I live at Eversleigh Court. Why, we are nearly there! Your dress is muddied—you can't walk home like that! My maid will clean it—besides, we don't really know that the child is all right. Oh, please come!"

It was hard to resist the pleading voice and wistful eyes, so Nina yielded, though she was anxious to avoid making new acquaintances.

A footman helped Lady Vivienne to alight, and the two ladies and the boy went up the lift to the flat, where they were immediately surrounded by the curious and rather amazed servants.

"Hurt! Oh, poor, dear little boy! Where!" exclaimed Vivienne's maid, kneeling before the urchin, who responded to her anxious enquiries with a low howl indicating excruciating pain. There was a chorus of "Oh's" from the maids; and, in the confusion, Lord Sutcombe's step was heard to pass into the other room. Vivienne knew the step, and helping herself by the chairs and the wall, limped out.

"Oh, Sutcombe!" she exclaimed. "We've had an accident—well, scarcely an accident. The victoria nearly ran over a boy—and we've got him in the next room. Wait a moment! I'm sure we should have killed him if a young girl had not sprang forward and saved him. Such a lovely creature, Sutcombe!"

"The boy?"

"No, no! Don't be silly! The girl. The most charming, lovable girl I've ever seen. And so brave! The horse was nearly touching her, indeed, I thought she must be knocked down. And so calm, and—and serene, amidst all the fuss."

"You seem to have discovered a paragon," he said, with a smile. "Where is she, gone?"

"No, in the next room. I had the greatest difficulty in keeping her. The boy's there—we're seeing if he's hurt!"

"A street arab, I suppose? Don't alarm yourself; you can't hurt 'em. And the young lady—have you put her in the glass case? Let us go and look at this rare specimen."

He drew her arm within his and led her into the next room; that is, as far as the door; there he stopped short and stared—his face very red—at Nina, who was standing with loosely clasped hands looking, with very little alarm, at the child.

Vivienne looked up at him with surprise.

"Why—what is the matter, Sutcombe?" she enquired in a low voice; then she stopped short and looked from Nina to him, for Nina had turned and was regarding him with a blush, and a surprise almost as marked as his own.

Sutcombe recovered his presence of mind almost immediately and coming forward said quietly; but with a smile of pleasure in his frank eyes:

"How do you do, Miss Wood! What a strange coincidence! I mean—"

"Then you know— This is your Miss Wood!" The exclamation broke from Vivienne involuntarily.

Sutcombe colored at the "your."

"I have told my sister of our meeting the other night, Miss Wood," he said. "I hope you are not hurt. No? And the boy? Let me see."

After a moment's examination and a question or two, which the boy answered promptly enough—he was dealing with a man now—Sutcombe looked up with a smile. "I think a good meal and—" he slipped something into the grimy hand, which closed over it instantly—"will be all the surgery needed. Take him away, Cook."

The boy, grinning like a chimpanzee, was led away, and Sutcombe, quite casually, though his heart was beating fast, besought Nina to sit down, for Vivienne was still half dazed by the surprise.

"Yes; yes, oh, yes!" she said, eagerly. "The tea is coming, and you must want a cup so badly! And your dress—we have thought of nothing but the boy! How indifferent you must think us! Sutcombe, if you had seen Miss Wood—"

"I can imagine the scene," said Sutcombe in a low voice. "I know how calm and self-possessed Miss Wood can be in moments of difficulty. I'll be back in a moment, Vivienne."

He went into the next room and stood quite still looking at nothing for a few moments. He wanted to realize that she was here, in the next room, to obtain full control over himself, to be able to move and speak as if his heart were beating with its normal pulse. When he returned the tea was on, and the two girls were chatting pleasantly. It was evident that the discovery that her girl hero was "the Miss Wood of the theatre" had not changed Vivienne's admiration of, and liking for Nina.

"We've got over the coincidence, Sutcombe," she said, as she gave him his tea, "and we are talking about the new play—Miss Wood's brother's, you know."

He nodded.

"May I, too, hear about it?" he said. "You know I am—well, interested."

At this Nina became rather shy—for talking to him about the play was a very different thing to talking to the gentle girl whose pale face and blue eyes were all aglow with sympathy and interest and the eager desire to admire and approve; but love maketh a man cunning, and after awhile Sutcombe led her on to the subject.

"Your brother must be very clever," he said. "It is a wonderfully good plot, I should say. There's only one thing—"

"Oh, what is that?" Nina enquired, earnestly. "Pray tell me—it is so full of faults—he would like to know—"

"Well, it's the card-playing scene. It's very 'strong,' as they call it; but it's just a little wrong in one detail. Baccarat isn't played as the characters play it—"

Nina smiled and blushed.

"Oh, thank you so much!" she said. "How can one help making mistakes when one is writing about things one knows nothing about! Of course, I've never played baccarat."

The silence, the breathless silence with which Vivienne regarded her told her what she had done. Her face flamed, then went pale, and her brows came together.

"What does it matter?" said Sutcombe in a low voice that quivered with sympathy. "Besides, I guessed your secret while you were describing the play. But why should you be ashamed of it; why should you wish to hide yourself behind a man's name? Oh, I see! But that prejudice is dead! Strange as it may seem, the world is beginning to have a suspicion that women are as clever as, more clever than, us men."

"And—you—wrote 'The Betrothed,' and this play!" exclaimed Vivienne. "Oh, you dear, clever girl! But how did you guess it, Sutcombe?"

Sutcombe smiled only.

Nina made the best of the matter.

"I think I should like to keep my secret, so far as the public is concerned, Lord Sutcombe," she said, quietly.

He inclined his head. "Your wishes shall be respected, of course," he said. "Perhaps—perhaps I can be of some use? I mean there may be some other little detail which, as a man of the world, one who plays other games than baccarat, I might help you in—"

"Oh, yes!" put in Vivienne, eagerly. "Do make use of him, Miss Wood!"

"What I would suggest, if I may, is that Miss Wood should bring the play and read it to us," said Sutcombe, in the most business-like tone he could assume.

Nina, the unsuspecting Nina, gave him a grateful look from her lovely eyes.

"Oh, will you?" she said. "How good you are to me! It is just what I want! But—the trouble!"

"Oh, don't mind that!" said the unselfish Sutcombe. "I've always got time to spare. How would it be if you came to-morrow?"

"Yes, yes!" Vivienne cut in again. "And I'll call for Miss Wood and drive her here. She lives with that bright girl—you remember how she made me laugh, Sutcombe?—Miss Bainford."

Sutcombe glanced at Nina, wondering how she would take this suggestion; but Nina, having no false pride, and, consequently, not being ashamed of her and Polly's humble diggings, accepted at once.

"That's all right," said Sutcombe; the phrase—it was Vane Mannering's—made Nina's heart leap. "Then I'll be off. I've to be at the theatre on business."

With love's cunning, he left the two girls together and went out into the streets to ask himself whether he was awake or dreaming.

When he returned Vivienne received him almost shamefacedly.

"Oh, Sutcombe! And I meant to help you, to help you to forget her! But I know now that it would have been impossible! I don't wonder at you—"

"Infatuation," he said, quietly; don't hesitate."

"She is too beautiful and lovable for words," she said. "If I were a man, I could not help falling in love with her. But—"

"But me no buts."

"But there is something about her. There is—an aloofness; I don't know how to describe it. Sutcombe, that girl has a history."

"Most of us have," he said with a smile.

"I—know. But hers is not a common or garden one. She has passed through some great trouble. I'm sure of it. We women are quick at reading other women—"

"Too quick," he said, half impatiently. "What trouble, beyond that which falls to the common lot, can she have had? She may have lost her father, mother, some near relation—"

"No, it is not that," she said, thoughtfully. "That would not cause the air of reserve and—"

He put the idea from him with the lover's impatience. "You're making mountains of molehills, Viv," he said. "You were always romantic. What 'secret sorrow' should she have?"

When Nina got home she gave Polly an account of the adventure and the coincidence, and Polly nodded in open-eyed acquiescence and approval.

"The very thing, dear!" she said. "Lor'! What luck you have! Lord Sutcombe can do what he likes at the Momus. Oh, we're in luck! And isn't he handsome?"

"Is he? I didn't notice," said Nina, absently. She was at that moment thinking of her last act, and when your playwright is thinking of that, all the rest of the world doesn't count.

Vivienne called for her as arranged, and they drove to Eversleigh Court. Sutcombe did not come in till tea was nearly over, and—he had schooled himself—greeted Nina in quite a casual way. She read the play, as far as it had gone; read it at first in a faltering, apologetic manner, but, presently, warming to her work and forgetting herself, read it with spirit and expression. Sutcombe, with his eyes upon her profile, listened intently, and now and again suggested some alteration in the details. Nina listened with the eager humility of the author, and jotted them down in her note-book.

Then Sutcombe disappeared and left the two girls to talk over the dresses, a subject which kept them so fully employed that Nina was persuaded to stay to dinner.

Nina was one of those women who possess the power of influencing the members of her own sex as well as men, abd Vivienne, already predisposed, fell a victim to this unconscious influence. In a word, Lady Vivienne was not happy unless Nina spent some portion of the twenty-four hours at the flat. And if Sutcombe was not there all the time, he spent many hours in Nina's society. They were the hours of his life.

At last the play was finished and handed to Mr. Harcourt. "My Lady Pride" had nearly run its course, and he was eager to try the new comedy, and, if it went well in London, he intended running two, or even more, companies in the provinces. He was so satisfied with the play that he mounted it with more than the usual sumptuousness.

But before the eventful night had arrived, Lady Vivienne had shown signs of the wear and tear of the London air. The doctor on whose skill she and Sutcombe depended had said that she should winter abroad.

"You used to have a yacht," he said. "Take her for a cruise, a long cruise. Anywhere out of the English east winds; I fear them more than anything else for her."

Sutcombe nodded; then frowned. "Give me to the sixth of next month," he said.

It was the date of the production of the new play, about which he was anxious, probably more anxious than Nina herself. When he told Vivienne that they would have to go abroad, she at once said:

"Let us persuade Miss Wood to go with us."

Nina received the suggestion as if it were a jest.

"Perhaps my poor play will be a failure," she said, "and I shall have to work for my living in some other way. Oh, it is quite impossible for me to go!"

The eventful night arrived, and Nina, in her old place in the corner of the upper circle, went through the usual agony; but there was really no cause for apprehension, for the end of the first act caught the audience, and they were tightly held during the remainder of the play. It was an unqualified success, the kind of success about which there can be no possibility of doubt. The house was charged with enthusiasm, and it was for some time in vain that Mr. Harcourt, coming forward, with his hand upon his heart and a smile from ear to ear, to inform the house that Herbert Wood was not present, could make himself heard. The house seemed very disappointed, but it was the only disappointment of the evening. It is nice to be able to record the fact that "the promising young actress," Miss Polly Bainford, scored very heavily in a part peculiarly well suited to her by no means limited capacity. Sutcombe, flushed with excitement, went round to the upper circle in search of Nina, who, her identity little suspected by the audience, was leaning back with her hands tightly clasped in her lap, and a look of relief and thanksgiving on her rather pale face.

"I congratulate you!" he whispered. "Let me take you round to our box. If you would help Vivienne down, I will go round and bring Miss Bainford. Yes," he added with a smile, in response to Nina's look of surprise. "Vivienne admires Miss Bainford very much, and is anxious to know her. It is quite a concession on her part, isn't it? But prejudice always melts away in the sunshine of common sense."

It was a very delightful little party at the flat, and Sutcombe proposed Nina's health, and insisted upon their filling their glasses as if they were at a city public dinner, and all Nina could say in response was, "Thank you very much!" But her eyes, not undimmed with tears, were more eloquent.

Sutcombe lit his cigar after supper, and, on his way to the cigar cabinet, took up some letters which were lying on the table. He opened them quite mechanically and absent-mindedly; for he was all aglow with love and admiration for Nina, and he was asking himself whether he dared venture to tell her that she held the happiness of his life in her hands. He had been so careful to conceal his love, he had set so stern a watch on lips and eyes, that he knew Nina had no suspicion that he had lost his heart to her. Should he tell her to-night? He asked himself the question with an anxious dread, for he knew that she would not give herself to any man unless she really loved him, and the fact that he was of higher rank than herself would not influence her.

His thoughts were running in this and similar directions, when something in the letter he was mechanically reading caught his attention. The blood rose to his face, then left it very pale, and he stood, with his back turned to the others, staring at the letter as if he could not grasp its sense. Then he put it in his pocket, went back to his place at the table and tried to appear as if nothing were the matter.

But Vivienne's eyes were quick to notice his affectation of ease and gaiety, and when he had come back from seeing the girls home, she said to him quite quietly:

"What is it, Sutcombe?"

"We are nearly ruined," he said as quietly as she herself had spoken. "Partridge, the trustee, has broken and bolted. He has made away with everything, or nearly everything, you and I possess."

"What will you do, Sutcombe?" she asked, after a pause.

"God knows!" he said, with a note of despair in his voice; for how could he now speak to Decima?

We Offer $1,000

For a Disease Germ That Liquozone Can't Kill.

On every bottle of Liquozone we offer $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. We do this to assure you that Liquozone does kill germs.

And it is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease. It is this fact which gives Liquozone its worth to humanity; a worth so great that, after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, we paid $100,000 for the American rights. And we have spent over one million dollars, in one year, to buy the first bottle and give it free to each sick one who would try it.

Acts Like Oxygen.

Liquozone is not made by compounding drugs, nor is there any alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. This process has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research.

The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is an absolutely certain germicide. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

Liquozone goes into the stomach, into the bowels and into the blood, to go wherever the blood goes. No germ can escape it and none can resist it. The results are inevitable, for a germ disease must end when the germs are killed. Then Liquozone, acting as a wonderful tonic, quickly restores a condition of perfect health. Diseases which have resisted medicine for years yield at once to Liquozone, and it cures diseases which medicine never cures. Half the people you meet—wherever you are—can tell you of cures that were made by it.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

DANGERS IN BUSINESS

THE EVILS OF INDISCRIMINATE RECOMMENDATION.

INDISCRIMINATE INDORSING

Indorsor Goes Into His Trap as Unsuspectingly and Innocently as the Wild Turkeys and Just as Fatally—Vivid But True Picture of the Misery and Injury to Morals Caused Thereby.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 26.—In this sermon the preacher points out the many dangers in business and morals, of reckless indorsement and the evils of indiscriminate recommendation. The text is Proverbs vi. 2, "Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth."

There are many ways of killing game. The one is to go after it with gun, arrow or spear; to slay it, as "Scotty" McDougall slew Krag, the Kootenay ram of Mountain Sheep range; or to lie in wait for it, as did Roualeyn George Gordon Cumming, the mighty "lion hunter" in African jungle; or to relentlessly follow it through American forests, as did Pathfinder in the old "Leather Stocking Tales;" or to course for it, as the old English sportsman with hounds used to chase the foxes over the Lancashire flats; or to pursue it with hawks, as the knights of old in falconry would hunt the birds of the air. As the eyes of the jungle monarchs or the kings of the air look into the fearless and unflinching eyes of man, the hunter knows that an unsteady hand or a bullet miscarrying its mark one inch may mean his own death. Then the "lives of the hunted" might become the "lives of the hunters."

Mighty must be the exhilaration of a brave man when killing big game. Almost intoxicated with excitement must be that modern Esau, Chanler, who, in the solitude of an African forest hundreds of miles inland, hears the wild roar of a man eating monster coming nearer and nearer to the deer licks. Lying there, he knows that if he can only slay yonder mountain of muscle he will save scores and perhaps hundreds of human lives, for a man eating lion or tiger has been known to live for years upon human flesh. So fearful do the natives become of such human destroyers that they have depopulated whole villages and towns, fleeing from their ravages.

Next to the actual experience of personally hunting the wild beasts of the forest is the fascination of reading about the marvelous deeds of the sportsmen who destroy them. Hunting such animals single handed and alone always has had and always will have an attraction for brave men. The hunter's life is a dramatic and an exciting one. But there is a more effectual means of depopulating the forests of their game than the gun, the arrow or the spear. The trapper's work has always been more fatal to game than the aimed rifle of a Kit Carson. Where a modern American Nimrod has been able to shoot one mountain lion in a night the trapper of the Hudson Bay Fur Company was able to come into camp staggering under the pelts of ten, twenty, fifty wild beasts killed in the same night. Yes, the trapper's work is the most widespread and dangerous and deadly to the wild beasts of a forest. As the Rocky mountain bear might put his great shaggy paw into a merciless trap, whose iron jaws snap shut and whose teeth probe their way through his flesh to the bone, this Bible scene of my text describes the predicament of the indorser who foolishly becomes the guarantor of a friend or an acquaintance's honor. As old bruin tugs and pulls to get his leg loose and keeps on tugging and pulling until at last he pulls off his leg or in desperation eats it off to get free and then goes hobbling away to his den, so King Solomon describes the somewhat similar predicament of the unfortunate man who has become a surety for his friend. "My son," said he, "if thou be a security for thy friend, • • • • thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth." It is maiming or destruction by an unseen trap. The indorser's dangers are great. I preach this sermon to warn my hearers and readers against these ensnarements which are set for many of us. And when I warn you against the indorser's perils I also warn you against the sins of an unjust recommendation of incompetent friends or mere acquaintances for positions which you do not positively know they are able to fill. These two evils come in the same category.

Why is the indorser's predicament like that of a wild beast caught in a trap? First, because he is enticed into its dangers unawares. He does not seek them out of a silly curiosity or from mere idle desire, like the antelopes that come nearer and nearer to the white flag waved by the hunters lying hidden in the grass. He does not charge them, as a wounded stag might turn upon the hounds, or an angry boar, caring not what happens, might rush against the fatal spear held out for his destruction. But the indorser goes into his trap as unsuspectingly and innocently as the wild turkeys are caught. The trappers build a cage with a small opening. Then they scatter corn along the path leading to the cage, and the wild turkeys, with their heads down picking up the corn, walk into the trap, and when they lift their heads they cannot see the exit and are easily slain. He goes into it and is captured as the mighty Bengal tiger is caught in a cage. The agile beast makes one spring upon the bleating sheep tied to the stake in the middle of the cage, and immediately the trapdoor slams shut. So the indorsers are caught and are like the victims that Jeremiah describes as good man being entangled unawares in the meshes of sin. "For among my people are found wicked men. They lay in wait as he that setteth snares. They set a trap. They catch men."

Indorsers are innocently caught in a trap. How? The merchant is sitting in his office, and a friend enters. He says: "Hello, Mr. So-and-So. I am glad to find you in. I am in a financial hole and want you to help me out. You know spring is here, and I must lay in my goods now for the winter. My business was never better than now or prospects brighter. However, in order to compete with my rivals I must branch out and get more stock. The wholesale firms say if you will indorse my note they will let me have the goods. Of course there is absolutely no danger of your ever being called upon to pay. Will you indorse for old friendship's sake?" You pin the man down. By long argument he seems to prove that there is no possible danger of your being compelled to pay. Then, for friendship's sake, you sign the fatal note.

Or perhaps the man wants a responsible position. He is about to be appointed cashier of some institution. He says he must have certain indorsers, and down goes your name. Now, my brother, it would be all right for you to sign your name there if you felt you could afford to make good that pledge if it ever came back to you. But the trouble is that most of us, with our present financial struggles, cannot afford to pay. Aye, I go further than this—nine men out of ten, ninety-nine men out of a hundred, nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of a thousand, never can pay or intend to pay the notes they indorse for the benefit of their friends. As soon as the notes fall due and come back upon the indorsers they begin to squirm and twist and try to wriggle out of their difficulties. Sometimes by fair, but, alas, often by foul, means they try to shirk and repudiate their debts of indorsement, even as some dishonest men clear off their debts by putting their money in their wives' names and then, going into a bankruptcy court, ask for a clean financial sheet.

Is not the picture true? What would you do if you were asked to pay the dishonest debts of your friends which you indorsed? Would you do it? Would you do it even if you had indorsed their notes and could find a loophole to crawl out? Would you do it, as did Sir Walter Scott? Would you do it even though it cost you your life to die an honest man? Would you pay those indorsed notes, as William McKinley paid the ones he indorsed for a friend? In order to pay those notes he literally gave up all his own money and all his wife's money. A short time before his death he was talking to a ministerial friend of mine, and he said: "Mr. Campbell, people sometimes wonder why I am so devoted to my wife. Could any husband but an ingrate be otherwise when his wife willingly gave up all she had to save his honor?" William McKinley never expected to be called upon to pay those indorsed notes, but he paid them. Would you pay, if necessary, those notes you are about to indorse, as William McKinley paid? Or would you repudiate or at least try to repudiate those debts, as hundreds and thousands have done? Dare you, with your present financial burdens, risk the sinful temptation of repudiation which you may have to face if you become a financial surety for a friend?

But as I see the old mother bear struggling to get her paw out of the fatal trap I do not pity her, even with all her sufferings, nearly as much as I do the little cubs who are dependent upon her for their lives. As I see a man struggling in the indorser's trap, with all his misfortunes, I do not feel nearly so sorry for him as I do for his wife and especially for his children, who are dependent upon him for financial support. Yet to hear some people talk you would suppose that in order to be kind, loving, big hearted, generous, a man should be ready to help all his friends and when they need it to sign all their notes, no matter what might be the financial danger that man may run in reference to his own children. Now, my friends, I believe one of the best tests of a true, big hearted man is not how he looks after his friends' notes so much as how he first looks after his own flesh and blood.

Do you mean to tell me there is any honor, any justice, any big heartedness, in a man going upon a friend's note when in order to do it he may have to take the very bread out of his children's mouth and the clothing off their backs, and the old homestead away from their inheritance? This is just what many men have done in order to win the name of being big hearted. I recall to mind one of this type whom the world eulogized as a kind man, but who purchased that eulogy at a fearful price. The man of whom I speak was for years the president of a New York company. His income was at least $20,000 per year; but, though he made much, he spent much. Every person in distress could go to him for succor and get it. His name was on scores of notes. Every little while he would gather five, ten, fifteen, of his daughters' friends together and give them a banquet and a "good time." The last act of his life was to buy a family plot for a policeman who was about to bury his little girl. When that man died the beautiful acts of kindness which he did were recounted at his bier.

But would you like me to tell you the aftermath or the second sowing of that life of indiscriminate generosity? The notes he had signed for friends his estate had to pay. The moneys he had lent here and there and everywhere were never paid back. Caring for every one but those of his own house, he became in the sight of God worse than an infidel. His two daughters, to whom he could deny nothing when he was alive, had to deny themselves everything when he was dead. His only son, the pride of his heart, the boy to whom he gave unlimited pocket money and sent across the seas on pleasure trips, applied a few years ago in Chicago for the position of a janitor, and he could not get work at that. This was the aftermath of the career of a man who purchased the unstable friendships of a fleeting moment by being untrue to the best interests of his own wife and children. Now, men, you have no right to help your brother with an indorsement if at the same time it compels you to become untrue to those who are dependent upon you. You have no right to give the luxuries to your neighbors until you first provide the necessities for your own household. Can you afford to pay that indorsement for your friend? Dare you risk the temporal and perhaps the spiritual welfare of your children by that hidden trap?

But another danger lurks over the indorser's trap. By going upon a friend's note a man may be teaching his friend to be careless—aye, sinfully careless—with money. Dr. Bowers once wrote: "Temptation resembles the rocks which rest their jagged sides above the waves when it is low water. No vessel dare come near them. But after awhile the tide comes sweeping into the bay and buries the rocks under a flood of water, so that the largest ships may ride in safety above their teeth of death together with the lightest skiff." That is a beautiful oratorical figure. But the incoming tide will soon be the outgoing tide. Then woe betide the boat that lingers there over the jagged rocks of death! Yet the temporary financial help we give our brothers by indorsements or unjust credit may be the means of carrying them into a position where they shall soon meet temporal as well as spiritual shipwreck.

Why temporal and spiritual wreck? you ask. In the first place, I start with the premise that many people are tempted just as much as they can bear. Place upon them one extra temptation, and you may lead them to become dishonest men and women. For instance, the other day I was reading about one of the great preventives of crime which was decreasing the proportion of the number of our criminals. This preventive is the registering machine which is now placed at almost every cashier's desk and in every street car. No sooner is the five cent piece collected than the conductor has to ring up the fare. No sooner is the spool of cotton or the pound of sugar or coffee bought than the register records the sale. At the end of the day the clerks or conductors must have their registers tally with the amount of money on hand. Temptation is now being placed at a minimum. Lessen the temptation to crime, and you lessen the number of future criminals.

The indorser's trap may not only endanger the indorser, but also the indorser's loved ones and the indorsee as well.

But a man to become a security for a friend or an acquaintance does not necessarily have to sign a note for money. He can give to an acquaintance a letter of recommendation. That letter may be of more value than money. When Ulysses S. Grant formed his famous Wall street partnership with Ferdinand Ward he did not put into that firm much money. Though he had been lieutenant-general and twice President of the United States, he never had much money. He lived and died a poor man. But he had more than money. He gave Ferdinand Ward a financial standing in the business community and the confidence of the public. The multitude of admirers of the hero of Appomattox poured their wealth into his office. As a result Ward was able to cheat the trustful public out of its hundreds of thousands. For the crime of that misappropriation Ward was sent to prison.

What Ulysses S. Grant did for Ferdinand Ward some of us on a small scale have been doing for our friends and acquaintances. If a man is out of a position and wants help we say, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee." This, however, is not the gift of grace, but of a false letter of recommendation. We frequently give such letters of recommendation when we know that the men to whom we give them are incompetent or at least unknown to us, and the result is that there are thousands of frauds being perpetrated all over the country not because bad men are instigating them—there are bad men everywhere—but because good men have allowed their names to be linked to those frauds carelessly. And there are thousands of good men out of the positions in life which they are qualified to fill merely because mediocre and incompetent men for friendship's sake have been pushed into those positions by what is commonly termed a "pull." My brother, never be security for a friend unless you are first sure that what you recommend by letter is "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

But my text has even a wider sweep. If men despise those for whom we unwisely have become sureties they are apt to despise us also, and if they learn to despise us they are very apt to learn to despise the religion we represent, for, say what you will, every unfaithful Christian is a representative, how ever sadly delinquent, of the God in whom he professes to believe. We are or should be, the lights of the world—the cities set upon a hill, which cannot be hid. If we are unfaithful in our dealings with others our faithlessness reflects on religion and is an offense against God himself. This fact is never better demonstrated than when a minister is untrue to his Divine Master and his sacred calling. At the public funeral of a worldly man or a worldly woman sometimes in order to give comfort to the living a minister will try to smooth things over, though the dead man may have been an extortioner, a drunkard, a libertine, a gambler or a despiser of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. Of course we should speak no evil of the dead, and it is not necessary that any one should cause pain by reflections at a funeral, but surely there is a limit to postmortem laudation. Yet he will talk about a twelve gated gospel. He will say there was pardon for Paul, who was the chief of sinners, and therefore there is pardon for us. He will not quote the passage, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," but he will talk from the text, "God is love," and he will try to make people believe that the unrepentant soul has entered through the paradisaical gates. But I tell you, my brother, even with the men of the world it won't go down. If we dishonor ourselves by trying to become a surety for our friends we dishonor God also.

I would beseech of you, therefore, in the smallest details of your life always remember you are the representatives of Jesus Christ. Spurgeon once said, "Many horses fall at the bottom of a hill because the driver thinks the danger past and the need to hold the reins with firm grip less pressing." Many men lose their Christian discipleship at the foot of the hill after they have climbed Calvary and descended on the other side. They lose it because they do not serve God in the little things. They lose it because they needlessly throw themselves into temptations by becoming false sureties for their friends. They lose it because, unthinkingly, they throw moral dangers in the way of others. They lose it because when they dishonor themselves they dishonor Christ. May God help us, one and all, to be true to Christ; then we shall be true to our fellow men in every way.

New Rector in Prince Edward.

The Rev. John de Pencier Wright, who has lately been appointed by the Bishop of Ontario to the united rectories of Ameliasburg and Hillier, is the son of the late William Wright, for many years Rural Dean of Leeds and Rector of Athens, Ont.

Mr. Wright was educated at Trinity University, Toronto, where he graduated B.A. in 1897 and M.A. in 1898. His college course was a most brilliant one. In 1895 he won the Scholarship honor Philosophy, and was prizeman in the same branch of studies with honors in 1896. Subsequently he took a full course in Divinity, winning the Provost's prize for Greek Testament in 1897. On graduating he distinguished himself in carrying off prizes in both dogmatics and liturgies. In the Diocesan examinations for deacons' orders, Mr. Wright was first of seven candidates on the list by examination, and was ordained by the late Archbishop Lewis in 1898. His clerical career has been a successful one. His first mission was Flinton, in Addington County, where very heavy indebtedness hampered all progress. During the three and a half years he was there this indebtedness was almost wiped out, and a new church dedicated to St. John, was erected and paid for at Cloyne. From Flinton he was transferred to the parish of Roslin, of which he has been rector for the past four years, and there, too, his work has been most successful. A new rectory has been built at Roslin, conceded to be one of the best in the Diocese, which with a barn, etc., cost about $3,000. This is paid for with the exception of some $350 outside of the subscriptions. A large new chancel has been added to the church at Thomasburgh with a beautiful memorial window, and a new chancel, ceiling and memorial bell placed in Roslin church, besides other improvements in the parish. His brother clergy, of whom the writer is one, congratulate him on his promotion and have every expectation that he will be equally successful in the future in advancing the parishes of Hillier and Ameliasburg, as he has already been in the past in those parishes, in which he has served. —Com.

A Fair Exchange.

The Indian, Isaiah Brant, who was arrested on Saturday afternoon for wearing an overcoat which was not his own property, was allowed his liberty in the evening. It appears that the red man made a mistake and took a coat belonging to a traveller named J. H. Adams, instead of his own. The coats were much alike. The exchange was made and Brant paid the costs which had been incurred.

OBESITY IN AMERICA.

A New Yorker recently undertook a long fast, for the second time, to reduce his weight, but such heroic methods are not likely to be adopted by many. Moderation in diet, however, has long been recommended, but never more so than now, and particularly so in conjunction with certain mineral waters, the use of which is strongly advised by some medical authorities. The British Medical Journal goes so far as to say that the efficiency of a Hungarian aperient water named Apenta for the systematic treatment of obesity is clinically established; a leading Berlin medical journal speaking of observations made in the famous clinic of Professor Gerhardt at the Charity Hospital, Berlin, says that this Apenta water produces a reduction of fat in the body without detriment. The necessity for this moderation in diet almost leads one to picture the typical American of the present day as rotund and bucolic rather than long and lanky, as has been the favorite characterization of Uncle Sam.

Public Library Notes.

At a meeting of Directors, held on Friday, March 24th, the following resolution was approved of unanimously. Moved by Mr. Flint, seconded by Dr. Yeomans,—

"That this Board learns with regret of the removal from our city of Mr. J. T. Luton, to whose valuable services as secretary and also as president are largely due the flourishing condition in which this Library stands to-day. And we, on behalf of our eighteen hundred members, and the citizens of Belleville generally, wish him every success in his new home."

Over 200 volumes of new books are ordered and will arrive in a few days.

Particulars as to the conditions under which a Carnegie Library can be established are being obtained and will be presented to the City Council for consideration shortly.

BAPTISTS CELEBRATE 38TH ANNIVERSARY.

BRIGHT AND ATTRACTIVE SERVICES IN VICTORIA AVENUE CHURCH YESTERDAY — REV. JOHN D. FREEMAN, OF TORONTO, DELIVERED EXCELLENT DISCOURSES — OTHER CHURCH SERVICES.

Baptist Church Celebrates its 38th Anniversary.

Gladsome we hail the day's return
In God's great name again we meet;
Our hearts once more within us burn,
And our communion shall be sweet.

That was the first verse of the first hymn which the congregation of the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church sang yesterday morning. Yesterday was a red letter day with the earnest band which worships under the pastorate of the Rev. O. C. Elliott, for it marked the 38th anniversary of the founding of their church, and the occasion was fittingly celebrated by anniversary sermons, preached by an eminent and eloquent divine, Rev. John D. Freeman, pastor of the Bloor Street Baptist Church, Toronto. The service yesterday morning, at which the writer was present, was a particularly bright and interesting one, there being a large congregation. The floral decorations around the pulpit were pretty and in excellent taste. In his remarks concerning the anniversary, Rev. Mr. Elliott said the Baptist Church of Belleville had furnished many workers in the vineyard of the Master; the bodies of many of its former members now slept in China, India and other lands, where they had gone in obedience to the divine injunction. Thoughts such as these gave them much to be thankful for, and impelled them to take courage and go forward. The choir sang an anthem, "O, How Amiable are Thy Dwellings!" in very good time and tune.

Rev. Mr. Freeman, the preacher, had a comforting message for his hearers, namely, the Fatherhood of God. There was nothing of the new theology, or "Higher Criticism" about it, but it was a message of cheer to all who heard it, and were ready to heed it. The eloquent preacher had a message for the congregation, and he told it simply and earnestly, his sermon being full of poetic imagery and beautiful thoughts. The text was Isaiah 46; 4:

"And even to your old age I am he; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you; I have made and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you."

The religions of the world, the preacher said, may be divided into two classes, the religions that burden men, and the religions that bear men up. The religion of heathen and pagan nations was one that crushed men; the religion of Jesus Christ was one that filled men with joy. The religion of the true God is not one that weighs men down, but is a religion that grants wings. Some one has said that man is incurably religious. So he is. We find religion everywhere, of a sort, but in the fanaticism of the heathen there is no joy, no uplifting; all is gloom, and the principal thought is one of a cruel God, rather than a merciful one, who must be appeased by the acts of men. And even in Christian nations to-day we find men and women banded together to defend the religion of the true God. This was all a tremendous mistake. The religion of the true God needed no defending; it was in this world on purpose to defend us. There were enough burdens in this world without trying to add an imaginary one, which should be, if we would let it, the greatest blessing. It was a tremendous thing to realize that each one of us is personally responsible for the privileges we have in this world, and, in the light of this, did we not need a religion which would help uplift us, and not be a burden upon us? The old religions, what did they teach? Sensuous languor and inaction, two things which always brought ruin in their wake. That was the story of the ages. The religion of Jesus Christ showed that, even as the Saviour was a man of action, so must His followers be. This was a day of action, and those who would be in the front must be up and doing, and no one needed the help of God and His Son more than the man who was in the thick of the world's work. In times of sorrow religion was needed more than anything; the burden of sorrow could be lifted by the love of God and by nothing else. And then the burden of sin! It was sad to be disappointed in other people; it was sadder still to have other people disappointed in us; but the saddest thing of all was to be disappointed in one's self; to look back on a life which had been misspent, to realize that weighing one down was a burden of sin, a weight that could be lifted by nothing but the loving help of Jesus Christ, if we were but ready to let Him aid us. In all ages men and women had been trying to find a way to escape the remorse which came from sin. Asceticism, aestheticism and many other isms had been started and had died, and now we know from the Word of God that there is only one way to escape the burden of sin, and that is the way outlined by the prophet. How does God help us to bear the burden? "I am," He cries, "bring the burden of your personality and work and trials and sin to me; I am, come to me; from time immemorial I am." We cannot forgive our sins, we may make excuses for them, but deep in our hearts we know that there is only one who can forgive our sins, and He is the author of our being; the great I Am; the one who says, "Come unto Me." The words of the text said, "I have made and I will bear." God bears us because He has made us; it is the divine fatherhood which speaks. You who are fathers and mothers, you know what this means. The divine forgiveness is waiting for us all if we will but ask for it and seek to merit it. The preacher told of how he had been praying for a revival in the Bloor St. Church, and had grown weary and heartsick, and had felt like praying that the burden might be taken away from him, and that another night he sent to do that which he feared he was not able to do. One night, as he lay sleepless in bed, a message seemed to come from on high to his fevered mind, "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." Peace came to him from that moment, and the next service held in Bloor St. Church was the most magnificent one they had known for years. To the people of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church he would give this message:—Don't try to carry God, but let God carry you. Believe that God, if you trust Him, will carry you to victory and a crown above.

Holloway Street.

The Pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, officiated at both services. In the morning the Rev. gentleman spoke of the life of Miss Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn writer, drawing lessons of value therefrom. In the evening his subject was "Gospel Gladness," and the text was from Isaiah, 55th chapter and 13th verse:

"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

John Street.

"Power of Habit." This subject was discussed last evening by the Pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, and the Rev. gentleman preached a most practical discourse. He especially enjoined upon the young people the desirability of giving their hearts to God whilst they were youthful. His text was from Proverbs, 22nd chapter and 6th verse:

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

During the service the choir rendered an anthem entitled "Seek ye the Lord," the solo being taken by Mrs. C. Strom. A solo entitled "O Lord, Correct Me," was sang very sweetly by Miss Wilson.

Tabernacle.

At the morning service the Pastor, Rev. Geo. Brown's, subject was "Our Duty to the Unsaved," and it was a discourse of an evangelistic nature. During the service Miss M. Stork sang a solo entitled, "Beyond."

Bridge Street.

At the evening service the Pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, gave an address in reference to "Fanny Crosby," the blind poetess. A number of hymns composed by her were sung by the choir. A quartette composed of Misses Vermilyea and Wilson, and Messrs. C. H. Vermilyea and J. T. Burns sang "Hark, There Comes a Whisper," and Miss Vermilyea sang a solo entitled "There is Rest, Sweet Rest."

Christ Church.

The Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney, preached at the morning service, and in the evening Rev. Henry Benoit, of Montreal, occupied the pulpit. He gave an address relating to the missionary work done by the Anglican Church among the French-Canadians.

METHODIST CHURCH BURNED IN DESERONTO.

CAUGHT FIRE ON SATURDAY NIGHT AND DAMAGE TO THE EXTENT OF $2000 DONE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Deseronto, March 26.—The Methodist Church in this town, of which Rev. Mr. Strike is pastor, was discovered to be on fire about 11.30 on Saturday night, and, before the flames were extinguished, considerable damage was done to the roof and spire. The worst damage, however, was caused by water, which practically ruined the carpets of the church. The church organ, which was nearly new, was also badly damaged. The damage is estimated at, at least, $2000. There is $3000 insurance upon the church, and also a heavy debt.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

GOT THREE YEARS FOR HAVING FOUR WIVES.

J. S. McMURRAY, FORMERLY OF THIS CITY, A MUCH MARRIED MAN—IS KNOWN TO HAVE HAD FOUR WIVES, AND POSSIBLY SIX—NOW BEHIND THE BARS OF SAN QUENTIN, CAL., STATE PRISON.

People of this city will be deeply surprised and, on account of the family living here, shocked to read the following, which we take from the Toronto Sunday World:

The world is small, after all. Belleville, Ont., is not far from Los Angeles, California, in this age of telegraphs. The Toronto Sunday World on Saturday received the following despatch from the Pacific state:

J. S. McMurray, alias Edgar M. Rugby, musician, lecturer, singing evangelist, erstwhile organist of the First Christian Church of Pasadena, pleaded guilty to bigamy before Judge B. N. Smith yesterday and was sentenced to three years in the state's prison at San Quentin.

Barring a fine, this is the limit of the present law. But McMurray is fortunate that his sins did not find him out later, for the Legislature has recently passed an act raising the maximum penalty for bigamy in this state to 10 years' imprisonment and a fine of $7000.

HAS HAD ADVENTURES.

McMurray is 48 years old, and has had an adventurous career. He has travelled much and has four wives that Chief Freeman of Pasadena knows of, and the chief has good reason to believe that there are at least two other wives living and perhaps more.

The denouement came last year. McMurray was in Pasadena, living under the name of Edgar M. Rugby. He was close to the half-century mark, but did not show his age. He was well educated, a talented musician, had a magnificent baritone voice and was a fine conversationist, as well as being a man of good appearance. In Pasadena he met Miss Loretta Campbell, of 356 North Pasadena-avenue, a pretty young woman of 25, who is well-known in Pasadena church circles. Miss Campbell was employed in a millinery store and was everywhere a favorite.

MARRIED IN BELLEVILLE.

Rugby married the girl July 11, 1904. The couple lived together until Oct. 3, 1904, when Rugby disappeared. Chief Freeman was notified and began a search of Rugby's record. He found that the real name of the former church organist was J. S. McMurray and that he was married to Sarah E. McCreary at Belleville, Ont., in 1877. There were three children by this marriage, and Mrs. McMurray and her three children are living at their old home yet.

The chief next discovered that McMurray had a wife still living at Houston, Tex. A child was born to this marriage and then the woman and child were deserted. Both are still living.

ANOTHER IN DES MOINES.

Tracing still further, Chief Freeman found that McMurray also had a wife at Des Moines, Ia. Then he started to find McMurray. He was finally located at Scranton, Pa., where he was arrested. At the time of his arrest, McMurray was posing in Scranton as a singing evangelist.

Chief Freeman started east for McMurray, and on the way stopped at Belleville and interviewed the true wife of McMurray, who signified her willingness to come to California to prosecute her husband if it was necessary. Then he went to Scranton and got his prisoner.

Once back in Pasadena, McMurray found that he was fairly caught, and decided to plead guilty, which he did yesterday.

When asked whether he had anything to say, McMurray began glibly: "I came to the coast to start life anew. I hadn't lived with my first wife for 23 years, but I had sent her money and bought her a piano. I wanted to begin again."

It will be remembered that, some five years or so ago, McMurray returned to Belleville and lived here for a year and a half or two years. Then he went away again. The family in this city will receive the deepest sympathy of all in the unenviable notoriety which has been thrust upon them.

"I TOLD YOU SO," WAS WHAT EVERYBODY SAID.

ICE SMASHED THE WATER MAIN AGAIN THIS MORNING — NO OTHER DAMAGE APPARENTLY DONE.

"I told you so," "I knew it would go," and many other expressions of a like nature were to be heard upon the streets this morning, when it became known that, for the fourth time, the water main across the river had been broken by the ice.

At about 2.30 this morning a large body of ice came down the river, but the only damage sustained of any consequence was the breaking of the main. Whilst this morning there was a considerable field of ice on the south shore of the river, between Lot's dam and the G.T.R. bridge, there was a clear channel from the latter point to the footbridge.

Those who saw the ice come down report that whilst it moved at considerable speed it caused no uproar and passed on through the channel made at the harbor.

The bay ice is apparently firm as yet. There does not appear to be any trouble in store, unless a large quantity of ice should come down from up the river, and if this should prove to be the case it will be broken up considerably before it reaches the city. There is a general feeling of relief among those who reside on the banks of the river and what is known as "the Flats."

As soon as it was known that the main was broken the water was turned on the temporary pipes which are across the two bridges, and no delay was caused in maintaining the supply of water, although at first it was not as clear as it might be.

In West Belleville on Saturday afternoon, and again on Sunday afternoon, there was a superabundance of water on some of the streets, but it passed off without causing much damage beyond torn-up wooden sidewalks and flooded crossings. Taking everything into consideration, the flood this spring has not been nearly so serious as people had been led to believe it would be, from the quantity of snow that fell during the winter. Of course, there may be trouble yet, when the ice from up the river comes down, but good judges think that the gravest danger is past. For which let's be thankful.

Residents of Wickett street and a portion of Sinclair street were on Saturday inconvenienced by water which came off the commons. In a number of instances temporary elevated walks had to be constructed in order to get into the house. Later in the night the water subsided.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

The talk of peace grows louder every day. So far it has not the official sanction of either party to the war in the Far East, but it is evident that the peace party in Russia is gathering strength. It is asserted by the Associated Press that peace may be concluded with six weeks, although that newspaper association gives no reason for its statement, and its peace despatches from St. Petersburg are not confirmed from Paris.

Still urgent arguments for peace come in the news from Manchuria and from the money markets. Japan has no trouble in floating a large loan in foreign markets at 90, while Russia, having difficulty in getting one in the markets of her own ally, has been able to place one at home at no better price than 86. The comparison between the two certainly shows that Russia is not beating Japan on financial grounds. Again, it is made known that preparations are in progress for the abandonment of Harbin and the retreat of the Russian armies to Tsishar, and perhaps to Lake Baikal. That may not indicate the utter defeat of Russian arms, but it does suggest a tremendous task for Russia to regain all the ground that she is thus surrendering.

At the front the Japanese are steadily driving the Russians backward, and the latter are now entirely out of the district watered by the Liau River. Marshal Oyama is said to have notified the Chinese Governor at Kirin that his forces would enter that city on April 10, and while the Russian military staff doubt if he can carry out his promise or threat, from whichever standpoint it is looked at, it is likely that the Japanese General will keep his word. The march of General Kamamura's army from Corea to Kirin is said to be unopposed by the Russians. The plans for further mobilization in Russia are held in abeyance, and this is practically the only indication that peace is being considered.

For the safety of Vladivostok the gravest concern is felt in Russia. A correspondent of The New York Herald, who has just come out of that Pacific port, says that preparations are being made for a siege, and that all the troops that were guarding the country outside have been drawn into the city. Defensive works of great magnitude are being constructed and carefully hidden by transplanted trees.—The Globe.

Former Resident Dead

Mr. Robert Wadsworth, who was for some time engaged in business in this city, died on Tuesday, 7th inst., at Park Ridge, N.J. An attack of pneumonia caused his demise after a few days' illness. Deceased, after leaving this city, went to Brooklyn, N.Y., and thence to New Jersey. Mr. Wadsworth was highly esteemed here by all who knew him. A widow and a family of one son and two daughters survive.

Present Ultimatum.

Tiflis, March 27.—As a climax to a fortnight's peasant rioting in villages of the Schorapan district a band of 800 armed men presented the authorities a formidable list of demands for local reforms, declared themselves solidly wth the revolutionary party, and fixed March 27 as the time limit for the satisfaction of their demands, after which they would accord themselves freedom of action. A battalion of troops has been sent to restore order.

800 Arrests.

London, March 27.—Dr. John A. Nelles, the oldest practicing physician of the city, died very suddenly Saturday morning, at his residence in London South. He is survived by three daughters and four sons, two of the latter being in business in Montreal and another connected with the Molsons Bank. Dr. H. H. Nelles, of this city, is a brother, the late Principal Nelles, of Victoria University, Toronto, was also a brother. Dr. Nelles was 78 years of age.

Marie Met Her Match.

There was recently a passage-at-arms between Miss Marie Corelli, the novelist, and a certain Miss Coals, a schoolmistress, who has a class immediately across the street from the writer's home. Part of the school exercises, it seems, consist in the study of music, and this proved particularly disagreeable to Miss Corelli. So the following note was sent across to the music teacher:

"Miss Corelli presents her compliments to Miss Coals, and begs that she will be good enough to arrange so that there may be no singing class between the hours of 10 and 1, these being Miss Corelli's working hours, when distractions are peculiarly distasteful."

Thew hite-aproned maid who bore this rather unusual missive was detained long enough to bring back the answer. It ran:

"Miss Coals presents her compliments to Miss Corelli, and begs to state that if such a course is likely to prevent the writing of such a book as 'The Sorrows of Satan,' she would rejoice in arranging a singing program for every day from 9 to 2."

Then Followed a Race With Death for Their Piers Five Miles Away—The 900 Passengers on the Parisian and the 300 on the Albano Were Panic Stricken—Discipline on Both Steamers Was Admirable.

Halifax, N. S., March 27.—One of the narrowest escapes from an accident which would have horrified the world took place in this harbor Saturday evening when two ocean steamers, the Parisian, of the Allen Line, with 900 people on board, and the Albano, of the Hamburg-American Line, with almost 300, crashed together about five miles from their piers. Both vessels made the pier all right, but at present the Parisian is down as low in the water as it is possible for her get with her stern half cut off, and the Albano in the adjoining dock has her stern badly twisted and is making water rapidly.

Both steamers were due two days before, but had met with heavy weather and made the harbor together, the Parisian slightly in the lead. At Chebucto Head they slowed down to pick up pilots. The Albano kept a little more headway than the Parisian and before the officers of either ship realized their position had approached so near as to make a collision inevitable. She signalled she was going astern, and Capt. Johnson, of the Parisian, ordered "full speed ahead," but the orders came too late, as the Albano crashed into the Parisian's starboard quarter thirty feet from the stern, cutting a hole fifteen feet long and four feet wide.

A Race With Death.

The stricken boat heeled right over to port and the passengers and crew who were below it seemed as if she was going over at once. A rush was made for the deck, where the officers had their work cut out to allay their fears. Orders were given to stand by the lifeboats, and the steamer's head was at once pointed up the harbor and she forged ahead at full speed. It was literally a race with death, as the water was pouring in and no one knew the extent of the damage, and at any moment the steamer might go down under them. She reached her pier and in a few minutes afterwards had sunk as far as she could and was resting on the bottom.

Passengers Panic Stricken.

As soon as the crash occurred, both vessels whistled for help. Every tug in the harbor responded, and as the Parisian appeared to be in the greater danger, several ranged themselves alongside that vessel and assisted in the pumping.

Passengers on each vessel begged the tugboat men to take them off, but the little vessels clung to the sides of the great liners, and did not leave them until they were safe at their docks.

Many passengers rushed excitedly about the decks, while others knelt in prayer. The officers were unable to thoroughly reassure them, but within a few minutes after the collision all had been supplied with life preservers, while the lifeboats were hoisted out ready for instant launching, in case the vessels showed signs of foundering.

Lost No Time.

The suspense of those on board the Parisian was intense. Great volumes of water were pouring from the vessel, the engines quivering with the exertion of running the numerous pumps and keeping the vessel plowing along at top speed. Half way up the harbor the Parisian's stern had settled many feet, and the list to starboard had become most pronounced, but the steamer kept on, until at last the bright light on the dock was seen, and those on board realized that the danger had passed.

The vessel ranged alongside her wharf, lines were thrown out, gangplanks lowered, and the thousand passengers rushed to land as the stern of the vessel touched the bottom.

Fine Discipline Shown.

The Albano, which was behind the Parisian, had a somewhat similar experience, although her pumps were able to keep her bow compartments fairly free, so that the alarm on board was not so great.

The Albano reached her dock a short time after the Parisian, and all passengers, only a few of whom were booked for this port, hurried ashore. The discipline exhibited on board both steamers following the accident was admirable.

The weather at the time of the collision was quite clear.

Repairs Will Be Costly.

It will take some weeks to repair her, and the job will be a costly one.

The Albano was in charge of Capt. Kuderhold and was bound to New York. Her fore peak is full of water, a number of plates are stove in, and her stem is twisted. She, too, will have to undergo repairs here, although it may not be necessary for her to discharge. The cargo of the Parisian, consisting of about 1,600 tons, is being taken out, and a large portion of it is damaged.

Cabin Passengers.

The following were cabin passengers: F. W. Ayre, Mr. Body, J. Buchanan, F. Bull, G. G. Curtis, Miss Furlong, D. A. Goodbun, Mrs. Goodbun, A. B. Green, Mr. Joslin, L. Jourdan, Mrs. Jourdan, Dr. Kirkpatrick, S. R. Lewis, Mrs. Lewis, Mr. Lumsden, Mr. McDonald, J. Stanley McLean, C. Milne, T. Pepin, Robert Scott, A. C. Smith, G. A. Smith, Rev. J. Stuffurth, Carnegie Williams, F. J. Williams, Alex. Wilson.

"Corinthian" Succeeds.

Montreal, March 27.—Great regret was felt here in trade circles over the fate of the old "Parisian" in Halifax harbor, although the Allans' believe she will be easily floated. The Corinthian, now in New York, will proceed to Halifax, taking the Parisian's sailing Sunday next.

Noted Theologian Aboard.

Toronto, March 27.—Dr. A. F. Kirkpatrick, professor of divinity and master of Selwyn College, in Cambridge University, England, who was one of the passengers on the Parisian, is to be an early visitor to Toronto.

ROBERT QUICK'S CRIME

Insane Man Strangles His Younger Brother to Death.

Cutting His Brother's Hair Saturday Afternoon, He Suddenly Dropped the Scissors and Grabbed Him Round the Throat—After a Terrible Struggle the Murderer Succeeded in Strangling Alfred to Death.

Strathroy, March 27.—A tragedy which has shocked the residents of the community occurred in the Township of Caradoc Saturday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, when Robert Quick, a young farmer, residing in the 10th Concession of Caradoc, about one and a half miles south of here, killed his younger brother, Alfred, by choking him to death.

The murderer is a widower with five small children. For some time previous to his marriage he was in the insane asylum, but was thought to have recovered. He and his children lived together on his farm. His brother, whom he murdered, was unmarried and the sole support of his widowed mother, with whom he resided on the homestead, a short distance away.

A Terrible Struggle.

Recently Robert has shown symptoms of insanity and Alfred, who had gone over to watch him, returned to his own home Saturday, thinking his brother better. In the afternoon he returned to his brother's for the purpose of having his hair cut. While Robert was acting as barber he suddenly dropped the scissors and grabbed his brother around the throat. A terrible struggle ensued and it appears they scuffled with one another from the kitchen until they reached the front room of the house, when Robert finally succeeded in strangling him to death.

Children Notified Neighbors.

Three of the children ran over to the neighbors, saying that their father had killed their uncle and asking them to go over to the house. Coroner Dr. A. Thompson and Chief of Police Wilson were summoned and they, with Henry Cline, were soon at the scene. Quick was brought to the jail here without trouble.

He apparently does not comprehend his position. He says he loved his brother, but had killed him, as he was influenced by a spirit to do so. He is about 45 years of age, of a quiet disposition, but somewhat of a religious fanatic. His brother was about 28 years of age. There is another brother residing at the Soo and one in Michigan. Chief Wilson took the prisoner to the County jail at London Saturday, where he will be kept until Tuesday, when an inquest will be held.

OTTAWA MAN WEDS TROUBLE.

Marries 15-Year-Old Girl, Charged With Abduction and Worse.

New York, March 27.—Within an hour after being married to Madeline Gildersleeve, a 15-year-old girl of Brooklyn, Edward W. N. Stewart, aged 32, of Ottawa, Ont., was arrested last night in Brooklyn and locked up on a charge of abduction mdae by the girl's mother, who objected to her daughter's marriage on account of her youth.

Immediately after his arrest, Stewart was charged by T. J. Assit, of Brooklyn, with having passed a cheque for $100 on the Union Bank of Brooklyn, in which he had no account.

Stewart said he was connected with a furniture firm in Ottawa.

Wm. Weir Dead.

Ottawa, March 27.—The death occurred here on Saturday of William Weir, who was at one time general manager of the Ville Marie Bank, the failure of which a few years ago was a sensational incident in Canadian finance. Mr. Weir, who was over 80 years of age, had been living for some time in Ottawa with a married daughter, and was engaged in the preparation of a work on the banking system of the Dominion.

Revolution in Crete.

Canea, Island of Crete, March 27.—A revolutionary band of 500 persons, demanding Greek rule, and which has been active for some days, fired on Cretan gendarmes Saturday, seriously wounding two of them. ANDREW MISCAMPBELL DIES.

Conservative Organizer Never Rallied From Illness After Elections.

Toronto, March 27.—After four weeks' confinement to his bed, Andrew Miscampbell died on Saturday afternoon at 1.30 at his residence, 159 Close avenue. Death was due to a complication of ailments, chiefly stomach trouble, from which Mr. Miscampbell had suffered for nearly fifteen years. Mrs. Miscampbell was at the bedside, and, with her brother, William Spooner, of Midland.

As a legislator he did much of a progressive nature. To him is due the credit for the sawlog policy of the Ontario Government. He also introduced the resolution giving the Province control over power from Niagara Falls. Both these propositions stand as memorial to his acknowleged legislative ability. Had he survived it was considered likely that he would have been called to the councils of the Province. He was trained for the church but never preached. He was an effective speaker and one of the best informed men in the party. His services were always at the call of those in the party who needed them.

Among politicians he was known as a clean man, a man who followed his conscience in politics and who stood for principle first. Speaking of him on Saturday, A. W. Wright, who was identified with him in the organization of the last campaign, said: "Mr. Miscampbell was a man of very high political ideals. He never countenanced anything except absolutely straight fighting. His devotion to the party organization of the last campaign was, in my opinion, largely responsible for the illness that resulted in his death."

He represented the constituency of East Simcoe in the Legislature following the elections of 1890, 1894 and 1898, and was well known throughout the country, where he was interested in lumbering around Midland and Orillia. For two years he was manager of the Northern Navigation Co., and in 1902 went to Sault Ste. Marie, where he was appointed manager of the steamship line in connection with the Clergue industries there. He contested the constituency of Algoma in 1902 and was victorious, but his election was protested and he was defeated.

He was born in Ireland fifty-seven years ago. His family was originally Scotch, but settled in Ireland. In his father's house in Ireland was organized the first Orange lodge ever constituted.

The funeral will leave Parkdale to meet the 8.10 G. T. R. train for Barrie, where the interment will take place tomorrow. Kerr Lodge, A. F. & A. M. will perform the last sad rites for their deceased brother according to the ceremonies of the order.

Premier Whitney's Tribute.

Premier Whitney said of Mr. Miscampbell: "Mr. Miscampbell was a very intelligent, brisk and capable man. He was well informed politically and took a great interest in the welfare of the Conservative party."

Mr. Whitney remembered Mr. Miscampbell's first appearance in the Legislature and noted the remarkable rapidity with which he sprang into prominence. Mr. Miscampbell was a general favorite and was much sought after for his platform services, he being a clear and convincing speaker.

As an organizer he did a great service for the Conservative party and the result of the recent Provincial elections bears in no small degree a tribute to the faithful work he performed.

Died While Lover Waited.

Hamilton, March 27.—While her lover waited for her to go for a walk yesterday afternoon, Miss Belle Lyne, daughter of John Lyne, grocer, corner of Wentworth and Barton streets, went upstairs and ended her life, whether by accident or design is not known positively. She was 21 years of age and had been keeping company with Police Constable Hasselfelt for about two years. He called for her yesterday afternoon and she went upstairs to get her things. She was gone so long that other members of the family followed to see what was keeping her. They found her lying unconscious on her bed. She had drunk about two ounces of carbolic acid and was horribly burned. Though Dr. Perry was soon on the spot he was not able to do anything to save her life, and she died a short time after. Coroner Balfe has decided not to hold an inquest.

An Ayr Boy Shot.

Ayr, March 27.—A fatal shooting accident occurred on the C. P. R. bridge spanning the river Saturday, when Percy Babcock was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of his gun. Accompanied by two or three friends, he was out muskrat shooting, and, when crossing the bridge, he remarked how easy it would be for a gun to slip through the bridge. In illustrating this, his gun was discharged, the contents entering his face, almost instantly killing him.

Four Drown in Upset.

Rock Ledge, Fla., March 27.—Several parties went Saturday to Ocean Beach, from Georgiana. Returning, a squall overtook a party of five in one rowboat, containing Mr. and Mrs. Miller, of Chateauguay, New York, Mr. Moore and daughter, Miss Edith, of Holyoke, Mass., and A. Baldwin, of Georgiana, with whom the rest were boarding. The boat was capsized, and all but Miller was drowned.

Farmer Suicides.

Kingston, March 27.—Samuel Richards, a farmer living near Elginburg, committed suicide Friday by cutting his throat. He was a married man, aged 38 years. It is said that he had been despondent for some time past, and the reason given for his rash act is financial trouble.

Mr. Sifton is to Stay Out.

Will Not Re-Enter Cabinet Although Premier Wants Him.

Autonomy Debate, When Resumed by Mr. Bourassa, Will be Continued from Day to Day Until Vote on Mr. Borden's Amendment—British Columbia Legislature Regrets Interference With Educational Rights of the New Provinces.

Ottawa, March 28.—Mr. Henri Bourassa of Labelle will to-day resume the debate on the autonomy bill, which will be continued from day to day until concluded by the division of Mr. Borden's amendment. The bill will then be considered section by section in committee of the whole House.

R. L. Bordon has received a telegram from Victoria, B. C., stating that the Legislature of British Columbia has adopted without discussion a resolution regretting interference by Parliament with the rights of the new Provinces of the Northwest with regard to education.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has given notice that for the remainder of the session Government business is to have precedence on Mondays after private bills and questions by members.

Sifton to Stay Out.

It was stated pretty freely among the Western members last night that, although his friends have urged him to with draw his resignation, and the Prime Minister would like to have him back. Mr. Sifton has decided not to re-enter the Cabinet.

After passing the Ottawa electrical bill, which took up most of the afternoon sitting yesterday the House concurred in the Senate amendments to the Molsons Bank bill.

There was a lengthy discussion upon Mr. Geoffrion's bill respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Courts in the matter of railway debts, a subject affecting the Province of Quebec mainly. The bill was left over at the suggestion of the Minister of Justice.

Lancaster Killed Again.

Mr. Lancaster's bill to regulate the speed of railway trains or compel adequate protection to be afforded at crossings in cities, towns and incorporated villages was strangled in committee by a vote of 42 to 12.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, in the course of a discussion at the close of the sitting, intimated that he was favorable to the placing of express companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission.

Rural Telephones Do the Work.

Ottawa, March 28.—Alpheus Hoover, of Green River, Ontario, gave evidence before the special telephone committee yesterday morning. He told how he organized an independent telephone company running from Markham eastward to Locust Hill, thence to Green River and on to Whitevale and Brougham. The company has 14 miles of line. It bought the poles and erected them and gave the contract for stringing the wires and installing the machinery to a company. The fourteen miles cost the twenty subscribers $48 per subscriber, which amount covered the total cost of construction and left no further expense except for maintenance. The line is working well. Among the subscribers are eight farmers, five business men, two doctors, one veterinary and some stock breeders.

Mr. Hoover, in the course of further examination, declared that there was no reason why local or municipal telephone companies should not be successfully established and operated at very moderate rates.

"ON TO VLADIVOSTOCK"

Main Army of the Japanese Turning in That Direction.

Idea is Borne Out by Withdrawal of Army 35 Miles South From Gunshu Pass—Russia Will Mobilize Five Corps—Internal Situation of Russia Daily Becoming More Ominous—Russian Loan to Issue.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—The impression prevalent in some military circles that the Japanese, having removed the possibility of the main army in Manchuria assuming the initiative, will now turn their attention to the next objective point of the war, Vladivostock, is strengthened by an Associated Press despatch from Gunshu Pass, announcing the withdrawal of the Japanese from the immediate front of the Russian army for a distance of 35 miles south. It is realized, of course, that this may be merely a blind, to cover flanking operations, but it is not improbable that the Japanese, having cleared Southern Manchuria of the Russian troops and secured a position whence expulsion would be a long and difficult process may be satisfied to hold the Tie Pass line, without further extension of communications.

Preparations are reported to be making for the mobilization of five corps.

The Government is advised that Chinese bandits are appearing in great numbers along the Siberian Railroad, and causing interference with the train service.

Internal Situation Ominous.

The internal situation in Russia is becoming daily more ominous. The Polish situation is causing great anxiety,-though it is said "intellectuals" and the educated classes disapprove of the revolutionary spirit, which is permeating the peasantry and laborers in Poland. The Crimea is boiling with discontent, and the strong hand of the military force has been invoked to crush the incipient revolution at Yalta, near the Emperor's residence. The authorities of the Government of Saratoff are closing the schools there on account of the peasant disturbances.

Will Conclude Russian Loan.

London, March 28.—The Daily Telegraph this morning says that it is understood that the principal French bank house which opposed the Russian loan has now yielded and that the loan will be concluded.

Plot Was Thorough.

Warsaw, March 28.—Baron Von Nolken is believed to be out of danger. He is suffering intensely.

Further investigation shows the carefulness with which the plans of the conspirators were laid. A number of persons of the poorer class, proceeding on different streets in the direction of the palace, just before the bomb was thrown, were warned by persons evidently posted for that purpose to go in some other direction.

Finnish Demonstration.

Helsingfors, March 28.—To-day was marked by a great demonstration at Abo (former capital of Finland), and Helsingfors, thousands of workingmen, parading with the Finnish national colers, bands playing national airs and the people singing patriotic songs. Resolutions were adopted favoring opposition to conscription. The gatherings were orderly.

Alexis Has Not Fled.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—The report published abroad that Grand Duke Alexis had fled from Russia incognito is untrue. He has not left St. Petersburg.

Watch Refugees in Paris.

Paris, March 28.—The police are exercising extensive surveillance over Russian refugees in Paris owing to reports that they are organizing to assist the revolutionary movement in Russia.

Balfour Reticent on Peace.

London, March 28.—In the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Swift MacNeill (Irish Nationalist) tried to elicit information regarding the peace negotiations. He asked Premier Balfour if he could make any statement on the subject, but as no previous notice had been given of the question the Premier took no notice of it.

Peace is Prominent.

London, March 28.—It is reported that M. d'Iswolsky, the Russian Minister to Denmark, left St. Petersburg on Saturday for Copenhagen.

A St. Petersburg despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. states that the majority of the Council of Ministers is agreed on the principle of the opportuneness of initiating steps in the direction of peace, and correspondents in the principal European capitals all report that peace is in the air.

According to The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Kobe, who reports having interviewed the American officers and foreign correspondents captured at Mukden, who have just arrived at Ujin, all were surprised that no armistice or peace proposals had been made. They confirm the previous statements that nobody had the least idea that retreat was imminent until Gen. Kuropatkin's order was suddenly received late on March 9.

WILL BE ALFONSO'S BRIDE.

Marriage Arranged of Spanish King to Princess Victoria Patricia.

New York, March 28.—A Madrid special to The Herald says: In official circles the assurance is given that during the present visit of the Duke of Connaught to the Spanish Court at Madrid the marriage of King Alfonso to the Princess Victoria Patricia has been definitely arranged. The difficulties with regard to the religious question have been settled.

The unspoken word never does harm. —Kosauth.

FRUIT GROWERS HAVE A GRIEVANCE.

The Farmer's Advocate voices a complaint on the part of the fruit growers of Ontario which should meet with attention by the Agricultural Department at Ottawa. It says that notwithstanding the strenuous protest of the fruit-growers, Hon. Sydney Fisher has announced his decision to place the Chief of the Fruit Division under the Dairy Commission. The reasons assigned are administrative ones. The original purpose in creating the Fruit Division was to enforce the Fruit Marks Act. In addition, it was charged with supervision of the packing and transportation of fruit, particularly in cold storage and cool chambers, and marketing. This brought it into connection with the cold storage and marketing divisions, which, having been organized principally to facilitate the transportation and promote the sale of dairy products, were in charge of Mr. Ruddick, Chief of the Dairy Division, under the Commissioner of Agriculture and Dairying. Subsequently, when Mr. Ruddick was appointed Dairy Commissioner, the work of the Cold Storage and Extension of Markets Division was continued under him, and owing to his close relation with the work of the Fruit Division, it was deemed advisable to place the work of the latter also in his charge.

From present indications, the Farmer's Advocate goes on to say, the fruit-growers will scarcely be satisfied with this arrangement. Among them is a general feeling that the minister fails to appreciate the importance of the fruit business and its possibilities in Canada, and does not understand the urgent need for extension of the educational, investigative and co-operative work which it seems necessary that the Federal Department should be in a position to carry on. Mr. Fisher's reasons for including the Fruit in the same branch as the Cold Storage Division seem to imply that the former should confine its efforts mainly to inspection and marketing questions. To those interested, it is not clear why the Fruit Division should be more concerned in cold storage than the Poultry Division, which has been put under the Live Stock Commissioner. The fruit men think the extent, promise and needs of their business warrant very much increased attention at Ottawa, and a representative official, such as the present efficient chief has proved himself to be, who shall have the necessary authority to deal with their problems as exigencies demand. They consider the Minister takes a circumscribed view of the requirements of this branch of the service. Fruit-growing is a coming business in Canada, and if the Hon. Mr. Fisher will personally acquaint himself more fully with its real needs and problems, he cannot but realize the desirability of what has been proposed.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Having a record of catching five consumptive looking perch and two sunfish in one day's fishing in the bay, I feel deeply interested in the fish discussion which took place last night. I don't think I would like to see net fishing stopped entirely, because if I went out in a boat and should happen to catch a four-pound bass there might be an item in the papers to the effect that an eminent citizen, of a retiring disposition, had been found dead of heart failure.

• • •

Joking apart, though, the net fishing question appears to have two sides to it. Undoubtedly the majority of people will be in favor of the policy which gives the greatest good to the greatest number. The net fishermen, of course, have a perfect right to be heard and to demand consideration of their claims, and if net fishing were stopped for five years and their paraphernalia rendered useless they might reasonably claim a certain amount of compensation.

• • •

Then again, the opinions and experiences of such life-long sportsmen as Messrs. Ritchie, Stork, Templeton, et al. must undoubtedly carry much weight. There is no doubt at all that good bass fishing in the Bay of Quinte would be a fine thing for Belleville. Those who have been at Wellington, Consecon, the Sand Banks and other places, and seen the large numbers of Yankee fishermen who "hang out" there during the summer months, cannot but feel that a few of those disciples of old Izaak would be mighty welcome here. And they would come, if we had the fish for them. To Belleville this is not a matter of sport, or sentiment; it is a matter of dollars and cents.

• • •

Most people, we think, will agree with the resolution passed by the Council, that the whole question should be considered by an expert, who could study the matter and report to the Government, and the Government, we may be sure, will see that right is done in the matter.

• • •

Judging by the flotsam and jetsam one saw in the river this morning, considerable damage was caused by the ice while on its way down.

• • •

The month of March, this year, did not live up to its reputation for bluster and blow. Farmers say that the month now drawing to a close has been noted for lack of wind, there not having been enough to run the wind mills.

• • •

There was certainly some justification for the rather warm remarks which were made yesterday about the breaking of the water main and the action of last year's Council in patching the pipe when it should have been sunk beneath the bed of the river, but people should not, in their haste, forget to be fair. The job of sinking the main beneath the river bed will be an expensive one when it is done, and last year's Council, considering the high water and other conditions, all making for expense, could hardly be blamed for side-stepping it, especially as, from every side, comes the cry for a reduced tax rate, and also because people who were paid to know said the job as performed would be a permanent one.

• • •

It was noticeable that people who did the loudest "kicking" yesterday were very much out of sight when the nominations were taking place last December. It is one thing to sit back and abuse a man for an alleged improper performance of certain duties, for which he receives no salary, and quite another to step into the breach and do it one's self. It will be fresh in the memory of quite a few of our citizens that the authorities had their work cut out, last nomination day, to get sufficient men to stay in the field to ensure the election of ten aldermen. It does seem rather inconsistent to severely criticize men who, after much solicitation, and perhaps at much personal inconvenience, consent to take upon their shoulders the burden of looking after the city's business, while the critics themselves are unwilling to get into the game.

• • •

These things, of course, should be borne in mind when the time for selecting the next Council comes round. In the meantime, the Council may as well face the fact that the big main at the lower bridge must be sunk beneath the bed of the river. There have been enough make-shift jobs. Let the matter be attended to properly, once and for all.

The following letter, which was received by the manager of The Intelligencer, is commended to the committee of management of the Old Boys' Reunion:

Chicago, 26th March, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I saw a small notice in The Canadian American that Belleville was to have a big celebration next August, in connection with the return of Belleville Old Boys. As I intend going home this summer about that time I would like to hear something of what you are going to do and also the date set. I think I could do quite a little towards drumming up the boys and see what we could do in getting a crowd together to visit the old town. Let me hear from you and if you have any literature send it to me and anything I can do I would be very glad to.

Yours truly,
JOHN MACOUN,
6613 Ellis Ave., Chicago.

What about that "literature!" It is time some of it was going through His Majesty's mails.

• • •

Ten years for Mrs. Chadwick will make her feel wicked. Her goo-goo eyes didn't work with a hard-hearted judge and jury.

• • •

It might have been well for those correspondents who telegraphed to outside papers the fact that Belleville's water main was smashed, to have also stated that the city has supplementary pipes which were at once put in commission.

• • •

Certain Liberal journals, which promised to accord Mr. Whitney fair play and have been accusing him of extravagance in increasing the salary of the chairman of the Temiskaming railway commission from $1,000 to $3,000, will, perhaps, give his Government credit for economy by abolishing the positions of seven provincial fishery overseers. These offices will not be filled. Fishery regulations will henceforth be administered directly by the department and also enforced.

The ends of the earth are not so far apart. By the last Canadian steamer at Sydney, Australia, there arrived a man whose family reside in British Columbia, but he did not often see them. Recently he is from the frozen Klondike, where he searched for gold. Now he has gone to tropical British New Guinea, where the aboriginals are still cannibals and the fever is more deadly than the spear of the native, prospecting for rubber. He knows what he is about, for he has been there before, and was nearly done for by fever. If life will hold out for six years he expects to have a plantation more valuable than any Klondike mine.

COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

TWENTY-FIVE FAMILIES EN ROUTE TO THIS DISTRICT SENT OUT BY AN ENGLISH NEWSPAPER.

(London Times, March 16.)

Last night a party of 237 emigrants from West Ham left London for Liverpool, whence they will sail to-day in the steamship Dominion for Canada. The party, which represents 50 families, is being sent out at the expense of the Daily Telegraph Fund for the unemployed of West Ham, and under the care of the Self-Help Emigration Society. It consists almost exclusively of entire families, which have been selected for the purpose. The men have all undergone a labor test and a period of training at Osea or at Hadleigh, under the same conditions as those required by the Mansion-house Committee last year, and their record is highly satisfactory. They are not going out on the chance of finding work, but are proceeding to definite situations arranged for them by the Self-Help Emigration Society. They will disembark at Portland, where they will be taken in charge and forwarded to their individual destinations. Twenty-five families, or half the whole number, will go to Belleville, in Ontario, and from there will be distributed by the Farmers' Association to situations already arranged. Others are destined for Winnipeg and beyond. The greater number will be placed on the land, and the men selected for that life are said to be fully qualified for it in physique and capacity. More trouble has been experienced in finding occupation for the mechanics, but a good many have been placed in the workshops of the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways. The cost of emigration, exclusive of clothes or other items of outfit, will average £8 10s. a head. Before starting the whole party and their friends, to the number of 400 or 500, were entertained to tea last evening at the Assembly-hall, Mile-end-road. They presented a very promising appearance and did credit to West Ham and to their selection—a well-clothed, well-behaved, decent, tidy lot of working-class men, women and children. The women and girls in particular were conspicuously lacking in those peculiar personal adornments and articles of attire which usually grace all festal occasions in that part of London; they were well and quietly dressed. Emigration under such auspices as these seems to be a cheerful business; the whole company were wreathed in smiles and apparently in the best of spirits. After tea complimentary speeches were made by Mr. Hall Richardson, Mr. Charrington, Mr. Harry Lawson, M. P., and others; and among those present on the platform was Mr. Gates, of the Self-Help Emigration Society, in whose experienced hands the arrangements have been. At 9 o'clock the emigrants left the hall and were driven to Euston, where supper was provided. They afterwards left by special train for Liverpool.

CANIFTON ICE CAME DOWN LAST NIGHT.

WATER ROSE TO HIGH LEVEL, BUT NO DAMAGE OF ANY CONSEQUENCE IS REPORTED.

At a few minutes before 10 o'clock last night a large body of ice came down the river, and, whilst no damage of any consequence was sustained, the water rose to such a height as to cause considerable inconvenience. The yards and stables on the west side of Front street were flooded, and in some cases horses had to be taken out and removed to other places. Pedestrians who desired to cross the footbridge from Front St. were unable to do so, as there were from one to two feet of water in the eastern approach. During the night, however, the water fell and this morning many of the yards and stables were free from water. Some of the cellars of Front St. business places were flooded to a considerable depth, but no losses were reported as every precaution had been taken to remove goods above the water mark.

The residents of Coleman street, between Catherine and Henry streets, experienced considerable difficulty, as the water overflowed the walks and street. A portion of Everett street was also inundated, until an early hour this morning. Water also caused some trouble in the western part of the city, in the vicinity of Sinclair and Wickett Sts., as the Catherine St. drain was not able to carry off the volume of water which came down that thoroughfare.

Reports from Corbyville say that the ice from there is liable to come at any minute now.

Worn Out? Run Down?

I Will Gladly Give You a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy to Test.

Nothing to deposit. Nothing to promise. The dollar bottle is free. Your druggist, on my order, will hand you a full dollar's worth and send me the bill.

Why do work and worry and excess and strain and over-indulgence break down constitutions and make men and women worn out and run down and restless and sleepless and discouraged and morose? Because they weaken the tiny, tender nerves on which life itself depends.

Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.

But the automatic nerves that, unguided and unknown, night and day, keep your heart in motion —control the digestive apparatus — regulate your liver—operate your kidneys.

These are the nerves that worry wears out and work breaks down.

It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver—the rebellious stomach—the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.

It does no good to take stimulants and narcotics, for theirs, at best, is but a temporary effect which merely postpones the final day of reckoning.

There is nothing new about this—nothing any physician would dispute. But it remained for Dr. Shoop to apply this knowledge—to put it to practical use. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ to deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve — the power nerve—and builds it up, and strengthens it and makes it well. That is the end of all vital troubles. That is the end of sleepless nights and restless days. That is the end of "nervousness," the end of brain fag and fatigue.

If you are worn out, run down and have never tried my remedy, merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized bottle of my prescription, and he will send the bill to me. This offer is made only to strangers to my remedy. Those who have once used the Restorative do not need this evidence. There are no conditions—no requirements. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

Religious Measure in Montreal.

Dr. J. Everist Cathell, a clergyman of Des Moines, Ia., was spending a few days in Montreal while off on a holiday. He visited the different churches and in one of them noticed an odd arrangement of the prayer desks. Wishing to understand the reason, he looked around for the sexton. No one was about except a workman in the rear of the church. Approaching him, Dr. Cathell said:

"My man, I am an American clergyman and have found much of interest in these Canadian churches. But there is something here that I do not understand. Can you tell me if this is a 'high church' or not?"

The workman considered the question seriously for a moment and then replied:

"I never heard that question asked before, sir, but I believe it is thirty-five feet to the ridgepole."—Lippincott's.

The Indians of Canada.

The Indian population in Canada last year, according to figures from the Indian Department report, numbered 107,978, a net decrease of 253 as compared with the year 1903. The report points out that it is a fallacy to suppose that the Indians are a dying race, doomed to extinction before the advance of civilization. Facts and statistics fail to support this view. In every province except British Columbia the birth rate exceeds the death rate.

MAKE BOGUS BILLS BY NEW PROCESS.

ELECTRICITY AIDS COUNTERFEITERS IN THEIR WORK.

New Haven, Conn., March 27.—Two men, supposed to be Wm. Gober, of Ludlow street, and Samuel Fastow, of 177th street, New York, were arrested soon after midnight this morning at the point of a revolver at their boarding house in Congress avenue. In their rooms later were found a complete and new counterfeiting outfit, which had turned out several spurious one-dollar bills, which the police assert are almost as good as the genuine. The police believe that an entirely new counterfeiting method has been discovered, as the plan of turning out bogus bills is a departure from the engraved plate and other methods generally employed. The plan is to take a new bill of any denomination, pour a fluid (which the men declare came from the Russian Government), over the bill, and then stamp the bill on a plain sheet of paper, made for the occasion. After the pieces of paper are pressed together for some time, the whole is taken off and placed on a cylinder, much the same as a record is placed on a phonograph. This is followed by an electrical process that makes a perfect reproduction on the white paper, and, after a drying process, the bill is peeled off, apparently as good as the one from which the copy is made. The original bill is not spoiled, and the process, it is alleged, can be repeated as many times as desired. The men who are in custody here had made, it is stated, large numbers of one-dollar bills during the past few days, some of which are in the police's possession. A complete counterfeiters' kit was taken after the men were arrested, including electric batteries and cylinders.

SOILED CARPETS.

How They May be Cleaned and Their Colors Brightened.

Carpets which have grown dirty, have lost their color and have become dull and old looking can be nicely renovated in the following manner: Cut up into very small pieces about an ounce of soap and make it into a lather with a pint of boiling water; then add another quart of water and an ounce of borax.

Put this mixture on the range and bring it to a boil; then remove it, and when it is quite cool add an ounce of alcohol, one of ammonia and half an ounce of glycerin. Do but a small portion of the carpet at a time, and renovate it by wetting a clean flannel cloth in the above mixture and rubbing in vigorously until the spots are removed and the color brought back. Another way to bring the colors out may be used, and it may be accomplished in the ordinary sweeping if salt or dried tea leaves or a mixture of both be thickly sprinkled on the carpet an hour before the sweeping is begun. Use a good, stiff broom when sweeping, and the whole appearance of the carpet will be marvelously improved.

Upset the Editor.

When the editor of an English paper received a fine chicken he believed it to be a token from some appreciative reader. After the editor had enjoyed a dinner in which the supposed gift played a part, he received a letter from a man, who said: "I sent you a chicken in order to settle a dispute which has arisen here. Can you tell us what the chicken died of?"

STOPPED AT THE ALTAR.

Family Quarrel Interrupts Wedding in England, and, Son Being Under Age, It Was Abandoned

The romance, though happily not the tragedy of Romeo and Juliet, has just been re-enacted in real life in the small East Lancashire Town of Darwen, says The Daily Express.

Both Romeo and Juliet were members of families of equal status, and having made up their minds to be quietly married at Holy Trinity Church, the banns were put up and published the required number of times.

As no one came forward on any of the three legal opportunities on the invitation of the clergyman, the Rev. L. Savatard, to put forward any "cause or just impediment," all was assumed to be well, and the young couple made all their preparations for married life.

Then a bolt fell from the blue. The heads of the two families quarrelled; Montague and Capulet were at feud.

The young couple deemed it no quarrel of theirs, and went on with their preparations, resolving, however, to keep the date of their prospective wedding a secret. Romeo would wed, no matter what obstacle, and Juliet, like Barkis, was "willin.'"

One day, abjuring wedding finery, and wearing their everyday clothes, they each went secretly to church.

Alas! the wedding ceremony which united the real Romeo and Juliet was destined to be interrupted in this case.

They had reached the altar, and the wedding service had begun, when a commotion at the church door heralded the dramatic arrival of the father of the bridegroom.

"I forbid the ceremony," he cried. The clergyman was astonished and asked for an explanation.

"My son," he said, "shall not marry the daughter of a man with whom I am not on friendly terms. My son is a minor, and without my consent he cannot marry."

The clergyman sought to move him, the young couple made tearful appeals; but the father refused to yield, though his son will be of age in a few months. The ceremony was abandoned.

A Million Pound Will.

According to details circulated in Margate, England, a will made over one hundred years ago, and affecting the disposition of property valued at upwards of £1,000,000, has been discovered by accident. The story, which lacks confirmation, is as follows:

A few days ago a Mrs. Horn, who resides at Byron Road, Margate, was taking down from the wall an old copy of Landseer's picture, "Shoeing the Old Bay Mare," when a small parcel of parchment fell from the back.

Not thinking it of any value, Mrs. Horn gave it to her children as a plaything. The little ones soon commenced to cut it to pieces with scissors.

Some time afterwards Mrs. Horn happened to mention the find casually to a neighbor, Mr. H. Gisby, who is the caretaker of the Arcade Seamen's Rooms. His answer made her rush indoors to gather together all the pieces of the half-destroyed parchment.

"It must be the will of my great-grandfather, Jacob Gisby," said her neighbor. "He died at Swadling, in the Isle of Thanet, and was known to have money. Gisby's have been advertised for several times in the Chancery List, but we have all been too poor to claim our rights."

The will is signed by "Jacob Gisby, a yeoman," and also bears the sealed signature of Nathaniel Austen, named as executor, and John Harman, his clerk. It bears the date May 25, 1795.

It bequeaths the testator's property, which is situate in Thanet, and which of course, has increased enormously in value since 1795, to the males of the Gisby family, of whom there are now twenty-one living, all of them being in very humble stations.

The eldest surviving grandson of the testator is Mr. James Gisby, who is shrimper, living at Upper Strand St., Sandwich.

The £1,000,000 will and the picture behind which it was concealed were bought a year ago for ninepence, Mrs. Horn becoming its owner at an auction sale held in Margate.

Curious Jail.

The most curious prison in the world is in the Island of Sark, a little spot in the home dominion of England. They have very good folk in Sark, and crime is son infrequent that an "open door jail" is the only penal institution in the place. There are very few arrests. The most recent was of a woman accused of stealing handkerchiefs.

She was placed in jail, and all of the sympathizing women of the island sat around the door and told her stories to pass away the time. The next morning she walked out to the Magistrate's house and asked whether he would release her if she promised to be good and not steal any more handkerchiefs. He said she might go and formally released her in his capacity as warder. As constable, also, he offered no obstacle to her immediate departure.

This insular Pooh Bah, in fact, is as much of a curiosity as the jail.

Breaking it Gently.

"An' did ye br-r-eak th' news iv Ca-a-sey's death to th' widdy, Terence?"

"I did, an' I did ut gintly. I said: 'Good mornin', Mrs. Ca-a-sey. It's good luck ye're afther havin' to-day,' sez I.

"'An' phwat's th' good luck?' sez she.

"'Ye've come into a tidy sum iv money,' sez I.

"'Th' saints be praised!' sez she. 'An' where's th' money comin' from, Terence?'

"'From yer husban's life insurance,' sez I. 'Sure he was kilt be th' blast this mornin'!'"

Sea Gull Surprises Cigarette Smoker.

While a number of people were watching the antics of the sea gulls, which rose continually to the parapet of London Bridge recently in search of the food which several of the spectators were throwing to them, one gentleman gave a large bag of sprats to the gulls, who eagerly took the fish from his fingers one at a time.

Standing close by was another spectator who held an unlighted cigarette in his lips.

Judge of the latter's surprise when one daring bird, finding no sprat awaiting him, suddenly swooped on the cigarette and deftly removed it from the owner's mouth.—London Mail.

PERTINENT POINTS

in reference to the substantial gains made in every department of its business during 1904 by

The Mutual Life Assurance Co. OF CANADA.

INSURANCE ACCOUNT

The volume of new business exceeds that of any former year, being 3,452 Policies for $5,048,168, all of which, except $30,000, was written within the Dominion. Total assurance now in force is $40,476,970.58 under 27,742 policies, the net addition for the year being $2,889,419. While many of our native Companies are seeking business abroad, some of them in distant parts of the world, it is thought by this Company that good Canadian business is preferable to foreign business, which is secured at excessive cost and with less certainty as to its quality.

INCOME

The total income was $1,725,308.90, being $1,373,364.69 for premiums, and $351,944.21 for interest. The gain over 1903 was $164,238.87.

DISBURSEMENTS

The payments to Policyholders amounted to $524,615.34, and consisted of Death Claims, $220,304.50; Endowments, $160,053; Purchased Policies, $52,394.54; Surplus, $83,183.40, and Annuities, $8,679.90. The claims by death were exceptionally light, being $51,404 less than previous year, and only 41 per cent. of the amount expected.

EXPENSE AND TAXES

The expenses and taxes were $300,807, being 17.4 per cent. of the total income, or about 1 per cent. less than in 1903.

ASSETS

The cash assets are $7,794,098.35, and the total assets $8,220,530.45, showing gains of $905,450.05 and $937,372.05, respectively. The funds are being invested in the same classes of securities as heretofore, principally in Mortgage loans on farms and city properties, Bonds and Municipal Debentures. The latter are taken into account at their book value or cost, which is considerably below their market value. The demand for money was active during the year, at better rates than for some years past, resulting in a slight advance in the rate of interest earned, viz., 5.09 per cent. Interest, etc., overdue at end of year, only $13,740.19, and nearly all paid.

LIABILITIES

The liabilities were again computed on the Combined Experience Table with 4 per cent. interest for all business up to January 1st, 1900. From that date to January 1st, 1903, on the Institute of Actuaries' Table with 3½ per cent., and thereafter on the same Table with 3 per cent. Reserve, $7,355,172.24. Other liabilities, $93,285.34.

SURPLUS

After making provision for all liabilities the surplus on our own standard is $772,072.87, being an increase of $170,920.20 over 1903, and this after distributing amongst Policyholders $83,183.40. On the Government standard of reserves, namely, 4½ per cent. for business to January 1st, 1900, and 3½ per cent. thereafter, our surplus is $1,049,400.71. The earnings for the year were $254,103.60.

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Chas. Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by all druggists.

TUNNEL TO P. E. ISLAND.

Deputation Will See the Government About It on Thursday.

Ottawa, March 28.—Thursday has been fixed by the Government for receiving a deputation from Prince Edward Island to urge the construction of a tunnel between the Island and the mainland. Rev. Father Burke, the advance guard, has already arrived.

Lunatic Cuts Throat.

Brockville, March 28.—Thomas Haggerty, a farmer, about 55 years of age, living in the Township of Bastard, Leeds County, while suffering from mental derangement, died by his own hand. He eluded his relatives and was yesterday found with his throat terribly gashed and blood flowing from the wounds inflicted. He used a sharp jack-knife. He expired before a doctor could be summoned.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy.

The great success of this preparation in the relief and cure of bowel complaints has brought it into almost universal use. It never fails, and when reduced with water and sweetened is pleasant to take. It is equally valuable for children and adults For sale by all druggists.

C.P.R. BRIDGE GOES.

Saskatoon Structure Swept Away by Big Ice Jam—Damage by Spring Freshets Elsewhere.

Saskatoon, N. W. T., March 28.—The C. P. R. bridge across the South Saskatchewan River here was swept away yesterday afternoon by a big ice jam. The extraordinarily early spring caused the river to rise at a rapid rate, and the ice coming piling down finally carried away the structure, the piles snapping with thunderous report. The bridge was only a temporary affair built to replace the permanent structure carried away by the heavy floods last spring.

Damage Done Near Fergus.

Fergus, Ont., March 28.—The spring freshet on the Grand River swept away the fine flume belonging to Messrs. Jas. Wilson & Sons at the Broomfield Mills here, with a loss of two thousand dollars. The jam has stuck a short distance below Fergus, but the river is now clear above.

Paris, March 28.—The second of the spring wash-outs occurred yesterday a little to the west of this town, on the Grand Trunk main line. In this case it was not the roadbed that suffered to any material extent, as happened at Tara on Saturday, but the flooding played havoc with the telegraph poles, which were down for about half a mile, the result, of course, being that transmission was out of the question.

Town is Under Water.

Thamesville, March 28.—The river has risen rapidly for 24 hours, and yesterday at noon was within 20 inches of its record-breaking height of last year. The town is almost flooded Business is suspended, the water being in nearly every store. Boating is in order on most every street.

Damage and Perhaps Death.

St. Paul, Minn., March 28.—A report reached this city last night that the Town of Louisberg, in the western portion of the state, had been practically wiped out by a tornado, and that from two to seven were killed.

In Two Tornado Visitations.

Wichita, Kan., March 28.—At Eldorado a tornado struck the business portion of the city last evening, unroofing several business houses, wrecking an hotel and a schoolhouse. A woman was seriously injured. Loss $30,000.

PRAISE PARISIAN'S CAPTAIN.

Nine Hundred Passengers Who Narrowly Escaped Now in Montreal.

Montreal, March 28.—Nine hundred passengers who were on board the Parisian when the latter was stove in near the dock at Halifax harbor, arrived in Montreal yesterday afternoon on two special trains. They speak in terms of the warmest praise of the coolness of the Parisian's captain, who they assert was responsible for the abscence of any fatalities. Besides the mails, three carloads of baggage were saved before the Parisian sunk at the deck. The passengers tell thrilling tales of the excitement and momentary terror that followed the collision.

Parisian Still Ashore.

Halifax, N. S., March 28.—There was little change yesterday morning in the position of the steamers Parisian and Albano, which were in collision on Saturday evening. The Albano is still afloat, but the Parisian is on the bottom, half her deck being under water. Pumps are at work on the engine room and divers are attempting to patch the hole in her side so that she may be gotten into the dry dock. She has a heavy list to starboard, which has increased four inches last night.

Drowned at Brooklin, Ont.

Brooklin, March 28.—A sad drowning accident occurred here yesterday. The victim was the six-year-old daughter of W. H. Elvis, miller, of this village. She and two little companions were returning from school a few minutes before noon. They stopped to play at the edge of the creek, which was swollen. She toppled in and was quickly carried away. Nothing was said by the other children of what happened, and it was not till after school was called more than an hour later that the anxious parents learned of the fate of their child. Search parties immediately set out and spent the remainder of the day patrolling the creek. The body has not yet been found.

True Bill Against Loney.

Cornwall, March 28.—The grand jury at the spring Assizes in session here yesterday brought in a "true bill" against Allan Loney, the Maxville hockey player, on a charge of manslaughter. Loney is the young man who is held for the death of Alcide Laurin in a hockey match at Maxville on February 24. At the preliminary investigation Loney was committed on a charge of "murder," but the Crown Attorney determined to change the charge to "manslaughter." Loney was arraigned last evening and pleaded not guilty. His trial will open at 9 a. m. to-day.

Jury Cannot Agree.

Ottawa, March 28.—The jury in the murder trial in Hull, in which Hugh McMillan, shantyman, is charged with killing Oscar Lauzon, retired yesterday afternoon and returned in 40 minutes with the announcement that they could not agree. Judge Rochen sent them back again, and locked them up for the night. If they do not agree by morning, McMillan will likely be liberated on bail to await a new trial.

Threw Switch to Wreck Train.

Clarksville, Tenn., March 28.—Four men were killed yesterday when a string of freight cars running wild on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad crashed into a freight train near here. It is thought by railroad men that the switch had been thrown for the purpose of wrecking a fast passenger train.

Government Steamer Ashore.

Halifax, March 28.—The Dominion Government steamer Minto ran ashore four miles from Georgetown, P. E. I., Sunday. The Stanley, at Pictou, was ordered to her assistance and left without unloading cargo. No particulars have been received as to her chances of getting off.

Found Guilty.

Toronto, March 28.—Yesterday afternoon Fred McAllister was found guilty of shooting at Roy Isbister with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and he will be sentenced to-day by Chief Justice Meredith.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

Linked by Fate

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet." Etc.

They sat up for hours; but all the talking in the world could not lessen the disaster. They had not been rich, in the present acceptation of the word, but their joint income had been just sufficient for them, and they knew how much the "little less" meant. Fortunately, some of Vivienne's money was invested in her own name, and had therefore escaped the clutches of Mr. Partridge.

"There is that land in Australia, Sutcombe," she said. "Why not go out there and see if we could do anything? We were going somewhere, you know."

"That is not a bad idea," he said. "At any rate it will be action. Anything would be better than sitting still."

Nina had promised to go round next morning; and she saw at once that something was the matter, though both brother and sister put a brave face on it.

"Let us tell her, Sutcombe," said Vivienne.

He did so in a few words, and as cheerfully as possible, but his eyes were full of a wistful pleading, an unspoken prayer, which Nina, absorbed in the grave news, did not notice. She seemed to be thinking deeply, but not feeling very keenly, and Vivienne watched her with faint surprise.

Suddenly Nina looked up. Her brows were drawn straight, her eyes were grave and thoughtful, and there was a touch of unwonted color in her cheeks.

"Shall you have to give up your cruise?" she asked.

"Well—no," said Sutcombe; "as it happens, Vivienne has some land out in Australia, and we thought of taking the Ariel there to see—well, if any money could be made out of it—the land, I mean."

Nina looked down for a minute, then up at his face with grave earnestness.

"You asked me to go with you the other day. Will you take me now?" she said in a low voice.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Ariel was skimming over an opal sea, her white sails filled with the light breeze, her bow rising and falling proudly as she sent the foam along her sleek sides; but Nina was not looking at the beauty of sea and sky. On her lap, as she sat in her deck-chair, which was always placed as far for'ard as the weather would permit, was spread out the chart over which she had spent so many hours of the voyage, brooding, questioning, sometimes with a glow of hope, but oftener with a dull despair.

At a little distance Sutcombe stood beside Vivienne, reclining at full length and covered with her shawls, and both of them were silently regarding the slim, girlish figure bent over the chart. Sutcombe broke the silence at last.

"If one could only do something, something to help her!"

"Or persuade her to give it up!" put in Vivienne wistfully.

He shook his head.

"She would give it up if we insisted," he said in a low voice, "but we shall not do that, Viv!"

Vivienne sighed. "How pale and worn she looks! While I have been gaining health and strength, she has been losing them. See how thin she is! Sometimes"—her voice grew almost inaudible—"I am half tempted to believe that—that—she is mistaken, that she is the victim of delusion. Have there not been such cases, Sutcombe?"

He smiled grimly and shook his head.

"Decima is the last person to suffer from a delusion," he said. "There was never a more acute, intellectual—but you know, Viv! I shall go and speak to her. I must! I feel as if I could not stand by helpless and see her growing more anxious, more despairing each day. Wait a minute; she is talking to the skipper."

Barnes, the skipper, a young man with a shy smile, behind which lay a profound seamanship, was consulting the chart with Nina. They saw him reluctantly shake his head, smiling still, then pass on. Sutcombe went up to her. Her head had sunk on her hand, and when she raised her face at his approach he saw so wistful, so eager an expression in her eyes, that it went to his heart.

"Will you not come into the saloon and rest?" he said, gently.

She shook her head. "I cannot," she said, humbly enough. "We have been examining the chart again—Oh, Lord Sutcombe, how patient you are! It—it is that that hurts me! If you would only laugh at me, if you would only tell me that your patience is exhausted, that you will bear with my—my whim no longer, I think I should be less heart broken."

"Why should I tell you that which is not true?" he responded, his eyes resting on her bent head with unspeakable sympathy and tenderness.

"And yet it would be so—so natural, so well deserved!" she retorted, bitterly. "Sometimes I wonder why you did not think that I am stark, staring mad, that I am the victim of a wild delusion—"

It was Vivienne's word, but she still smiled.

"For what is it that I have asked you to do, and you, so generously, so trustingly, have consented to do?" she went on with a deep sigh.

"Not a very great thing, surely!" he said, trying to answer and reassure her in a breath. "You have asked us to leave the direct course, to turn aside that we may help you to find a certain island, of which you know, and which you want us to visit."

"An island not marked on the chart, a nameless place, as nameless and intangible as that of a dream. Sometimes," sighingly, despairfully, "I wonder whether it exists only in a dream: whether I shall wake to find that its only place is in my imagination. And yet—no! If you only knew! Why do you not insist upon my telling you all, everything? Why do you not refuse to continue in this mad search unless I give you better reasons for doing so?"

"Because I love you so dearly that if this island ever existed, and the search were as futile as that for the philosopher's stone, I would not turn from it until my heart told me you wished to do so," he might have replied: but instead he said:

"Why grieve so about the matter, Decima? No harm has been done. We have had, are having, fine weather; it does not matter whether we reach port this week or the next. And Vivienne is of the same mind as I. If you would only be less anxious! Do you think we cannot see that the strain is telling on you, and that we do not—suffer? Ah, do not be so unhappy! Nothing—nothing is worth that!"

She pushed the hair from her forehead and looked up at him gratefully.

"How good you are to me!" she said in a low voice. "Well, bear with me a little longer. Listen, Lord Sutcombe. If—if we do not discover this island to-morrow, I will tell you why I have persuaded you to turn out of your course in search of it; I will tell you—all. It is only fair. But give me until to-morrow. Barnes tells me that he will try a new course, that he himself feels certain land, islands, perhaps, are nearer than the chart indicates. Give me till to-morrow at noon!"

"I will give you twelve months of to-morrows if you like," he said, fervently; "we will run in at the next port and provision the yacht for a year's cruise—"

She turned from him half impatiently.

"Only till to-morrow!" she said, and she bent over the chart again.

But her eyes were dim with the pangs of disappointment and failure, for the Ariel had been beating about for weeks in search of the nameless island, and the dream, the bright dream which she had dreamed the night Sutcombe had told her of their loss, and she had been compelled to ask them to let her go with them, was growing faint and pale with the sickness of hope deferred.

After a time she folded the chart, rose resolutely, and with a gesture, as of one throwing off a heavy weight, went to the other two.

"From this moment," she said, "I will say no more, no, not a word. If—if we fail, then you shall think it was just a dream, a delusion—ah, do you think I do not know what is in your minds!" as Vivienne colored and lowered her eyes.

"Let us go and have some music, dear," said Vivienne, laying her hand on Nina's arm tenderly, for she knew that while they remained on deck Nina's aching eyes would scan the sea, that seemed to mock her with its emptiness.

They went below, and Nina, acting up to her resolve, played and sang and talked, as if her heart were not racked with suspense; but as she lay in her berth that night the bitterness welled up in her. And it was not altogether unselfish. For as the Ariel had approached the spot where she imagined the Fairy Isle to be, there had arisen and grown an aching longing to see once more the place where she had suffered—and, ah yes, for a short time, enjoyed—so much. Vane Mannering was lost to her—she did not know whether he was alive or dead—but for a few fleeting hours she had basked in the knowledge of her own love for him, and the hope that his love might turn to her.

She slept at last, a fitful sleep, but was up on deck soon after dawn, and Barnes, at his wheel, touched the peak of his cap and smiled his shy greeting.

"Nothing, Barnes?" she asked with repressed eagerness.

"Nothing, miss," he admitted reluctantly. "I've changed her course for west due west, and—we shall see, miss. We may sight land before noon—"

"To find another group of islands—but not those we want," she said with a sigh, as she turned away. Barnes shook his head at the sails. She who had been so ready with the sweet smile, the gentle word which had won the hearts of the men, as they had won the heart of their master, had grown almost irritable and impatient, and Barnes as he watched her standing at the bow with her hand shading her eyes, hopeless and incredulous of "Miss Decima's island," shook his head again.

But he held on to his course, and about noon Nina, who had been leaning against the taffrail, her eyes fixed on the sea, uttered an exclamation and pointed at some object floating on the waves.

"Seaweed!" said Sutcombe, coming quickly to her side, and he turned towards her with an eagerness almost as keen as her own, then shouted the word to Vivienne. In silence, almost breathlessly, they watched and waited. But "Miss Decima's luck," as the men had grown to call it, pursued her even now; for as they gazed a slight mist rose above the horizon, gradually crept towards and enveloped the yacht, shutting out sea and sky. Down came the sails, and the vessel floated like a bird through the white fog. They should have anchored, but Barnes withheld the order, and, taking some soundings, let the vessel drift.

Nina turned away; her eyes were dim and on her lips flickered a smile that was worse than tears.

"Fate is against me!" she said. "The time is up—and I am beaten! Lord Sutcombe, I—I—give it up!"

"Wait!" he said. "Look!" and he waved his hand toward the mist.

It was lifting as swiftly as it had fallen; before it had quite cleared out spread the sails, and the Ariel drove through it. Clearer and yet clearer grew the air, and then, so suddenly that they had scarcely time to exclaim, there lay before them the vision of an island, green as an emerald, and set in a golden line of sand, with the shrill cry of the sea-birds circling round it, the waving of the fir-trees on its crest.

It was Vivienne who first cried out. Nina stood, her hands clenched on her bosom, her eyes like those of one in a trance. Sutcombe turned to her with an instinctive gesture of sympathy, for her lips were white and her breath came painfully.

"It is the island, at last!" she said.

The skipper's word of command rang out, the "Aye, aye, sir!" of the men followed sharp upon it, the sails fell as if by magic, and the Ariel was anchored within, as it seemed in that clear air, half a mile of the island which even yet Nina could scarcely help regarding as a vision.

Sutcombe took her hand and pressed it, and she turned to him as if awaking from a dream; but with surprise he saw that there was no joy in her eyes, only an expression of satisfaction that was not untinged with sadness.

"We will land at once," he said. "You wish it?"

"Yes," she said, "let us go. When—when we are there I will tell you, I will explain. Your patience—ah, how great it has been, how sorely tried!—shall not be tried any longer. Yes, let us land. But, wait!" She put her hand to her head as if trying to think, as if some difficulty had occurred to her. "Lord Sutcombe, I want that only you and Lady Vivienne and I should land—at first, at any rate. Can you manage it so?"

"Why, of course!" he responded with an encouraging smile as he looked into the lovely eyes whose every expression he knew by heart. "I will take just sufficient men to land us, and they shall remain in the boat until, well, as long as you wish them to do so."

She nodded and stood watching the launching and manning of the boat. The crew of the Ariel were disciplined like a man-o'-war's men, and they rowed with stolid faces and incurious eyes, whatever they may have felt, to the nameless island which they had been chasing so long.

As the boat approached the sand-fringed shore, Nina's face grew paler, and she turned it away from the others, though there was no need, for Sutcombe and Vivienne studiously avoided glancing at her. He helped her out of the boat, almost as gently and carefully as he helped Vivienne; and as if absorbed in her own thoughts, Nina silently led the way up the beach.

The huts were still standing as they had been left, but Nina's eyes were fixed on a spot where a mound rose on the shingly strand. She stood there for a moment, her head bent, her lips moving; then she walked on to one of the huts.

"Go in," she said, motioning them to enter her own hut. "Yes, I—I—am at home! Did you not guess?" as they entered and stood and looked round them, at last regarding her with astonishment. "I once lived on this island. I was wrecked here, with some of the passengers and the crew of the Alpina. Sit down, Lady Vivienne, I want to tell you."

Leaning against the rough hut she told them the story of the wreck, that is, a part of the story, for she made no mention of Vane Mannering, who had been the prominent figure. "My father died—and a friend, a friend who was like a brother to me— It was at their grave I—stopped just now."

Sutcombe's eyes were fixed on her with the tenderest sympathy.

"I—I am not surprised at your wanting to find the island, at your anxiety to revisit it," he said in a low voice.

But Nina shook her head. "I had another reason," she said. She might well have said reasons, for assuredly the longing to see once again the place in which she had tasted such misery and such happiness had drawn here there. "It is the reason that I asked you to let us come alone, Lord Sutcombe, this island was discovered, so to speak, by the unfortunate castaways, who dragged themselves to land here that night," she shuddered; "but my father made another discovery, and it is that which led me to ask you to let me come with you on your cruise, and gave me courage to persuade you to alter the course of the Ariel. You remember the night you told me of your loss?"

Sutcombe nodded. Was there any one night, any one incident connected with her, which he was likely to forget?

"That night I remembered—I think for the first time, strange as it may seem—this discovery of my father's, and an idea in connection with it flashed into my mind. Tell me, Lord Sutcombe; I am his only daughter, child. That which belonged to him, when he died, now belongs to me, does it not?"

"Most certainly!" replied Sutcombe, all in the dark, but patiently waiting for the light. "You inherit everything of which he was possessed."

"I am glad," she said, as if relieved. "Wait for one minute!"

She went outside, but even at that moment she paused and looked round with an aching heart, a heart that throbbed painfully with the memories of those short days of vague, uncertain bliss. The whole island seemed to speak of Vane; seemed to be crying to her: "You have come back; but where is he, our master!" She drew her hand across her eyes and roused herself from her reverie, and, going to the back of the hut, scraped away the soil from a small mound, took up two or three of the pieces of gold quartz, and, re-entering the hut, laid them on the rough table just as her father had done on the night of their discovery.

Sutcombe and Vivienne looked from them to her questioningly.

"Do you not understand?" she said with a smile, almost of contentment; for it was sweet to be able to repay, even thus inadequately, some fraction of the goodness of these friends of hers.

"What is it?" said Sutcombe, taking up one of the pieces. "Why! It's not—"

"Yes, it is gold!" she said, her face flushing, her eyes glowing.

But, Sutcombe's face grew pale, and, laying the quartz down, he drew back.

"I—I congratulate you, Miss Wood," he said—not "Decima," as he had of late slipped into calling her. "If—if there is much of this, you—you must be very rich!"

"I!" she said. "Ah, yes, I suppose so; but—but it was not for myself—" She stopped, for his face had grown hot, and his eyes flashed almost resentfully. Vivienne laid her her upon his arm imploringly.

"Wait; wait till she has finished, Sutcombe," she whispered.

Nina looked from one to the other and, comprehending, colored almost as hotly as Sutcombe.

"No, no!" she said. "I—I was not going to offer you these, indeed they are not mine"—she paused—"only half of it is mine. But there is plenty more: my father said the island was an Eldorado; and the gold is yours, any one's who comes and likes to dig for it. Indeed, one need not dig very much, for it lies in the beds of the streams, and in streaks in the rocks—"

Sutcombe gazed at her in amazement too great for words.

"And—and no one knows of this but you!" he exclaimed at last.

"No one but I—and one other, the—the person to whom half of the gold belongs."

He wiped his brow, for to the least mercenary of men the presence of a vast quantity of gold, with prospective possession, is rather a discomposing fact, one not to be contemplated without a thrill.

"And he?" he asked, breathlessly. "Where is he? Why is he not here?"

The color left her face and her lids drooped.

"I do not know," she said in a low voice. "He—he may be dead!"

"He did not escape with you?" asked Sutcombe.

She made a movement of her hand, as if the question, the subject, pained her.

"No—I left him here. I—ah, do not ask me any more!"

Vivienne leaned forward and touched her hand. "No, no, dear, we will not! Oh, do you think we do not understand! To be wrecked here on this lonely place! To have suffered, as you must have suffered—no, not a word more shall be spoken, dear Decima!"

Sutcombe leaned against the log wall of the hut, his arms folded, his eyes fixed, not on the gold, but on the floor.

"And it was for us, for us that you have worn yourself to a shadow with anxiety and hope deferred," he said. "That we might have this gold—"

"Why not?" she broke in. "Would you not have done the same for me, for any friend? And what true friends you have been to me! And what is the use of it if it cannot be put to such good service?"

"And you never thought of yourself?" he said, very quietly. "You were not rich—"

"Very poor, indeed," she said with a laugh.

"And you never thought of finding this island, this Eldorado, for your own benefit?"

"No," she said simply; "what should I have done with it? What is the use of money when—" She paused. "Besides I was lucky so soon. I thought so much of my work, of my play, that if the gold had been lying on Hampstead Heath instead of on a mysterious island in the wide ocean, I don't think I should have troubled to take the train for it." She sighed, then, with a winning smile, she went up to him and touched his sleeve. "Lord Sutcombe, you won't let scruples interfere, you won't—make difficulties?"

He longed to take the hand that touched him so pleadingly, to draw her outside and say, "I will take the gold you offer me so generously if you will be still more generous and give me that which I value beyond all the gold in the world—yourself!" But he knew, though he could not have told how he knew, that this was of all moments the worst for such a question; of all places, this the least favorable.

"No," he said, drawing in a long breath. "I'm not so churlish—so foolish. I am still too amazed—at present, it all seems like a story out of an adventure book—to quite realize it; but—I accept your generous offer. If the gold is here for the finding—well, Vivienne and you shall be rich."

"Yes!" said Vivienne with womanly cunning. "I accept unreservedly. I have hated the thought of being poor! Why, think of it! We should have had to sell the Ariel at Melbourne, have been obliged to go in for farming, or something of that kind, or settled in some stuffy town on the Continent. And now we can keep the dear old yacht, and we can all go back to England—and you can buy back Southerwood, Sutcombe—I told you how it passed from us, Decima? And I can get those pearls I wanted, and—oh, what will you do with all your money, you millionairess?" she broke off, drawing Nina to her and hugging her.

Nina tried to smile. What, indeed? The uselessness of the gold mocked her at that moment as it had mocked her the day it had been found. There was only one thing she wanted, and it is the one thing no money can buy—forgetfulness! But she strove to dispel the black shadow from her mind.

"Oh, I'll found a National Theatre—for the performance of artistic dramas—by 'Herbert Wood!'" she said. "But now let us be practical, as Polly would say. This is a dangerous secret, Lord Sutcombe. You know now why I thought it better that we should land alone?"

He nodded.

"Let me think!" He took out his pipe. "May I? Thanks! Yes, the the men mustn't land here, at any rate; they must not come further into the island than necessary. We want water—"

"There is plenty near the beach!" said Nina, stifling a sigh; back came the times when she walked from the stream with the can in her hand, and Vane coming to meet her to take it from her.

"Quite so. They shall get what they want, and Barnes shall take the Ariel on a cruise, leaving us here. There are enough provisions—"

And there are fish and duck, and turtles in plenty," said poor Nina, trying to smile.

Vivienne clapped her hands and nodded gleefully, though all the time she was watching Nina from the corner of her gentle eyes. "Why, it will be like a picnic, a real picnic! Even if there had not been all this wonderful gold, it would have been worth all the trouble—ah, but not your anxiety, dear!—just to see so beautiful and romantic a place. It is like a Fairy Isle!"

Nina turned away swiftly; the name was like a stab.

They talked over Sutcombe's plan, and presently he went down to the beach, signalled the boat and sent it off for rugs, bedding and provisions; and when these were brought he went aboard, told Barnes they intended picnicking on the island, and ordered him to take the Ariel on a cruise and pick them up in a week's time.

When he came back he found that the two women had already started the picnic. Nina's hut had been transformed into quite a snug and comfortable bower with the aid of the rugs and other things brought from the yacht, and Nina, Vivienne told him, was down at the old "saloon" getting tea.

"It's the most wonderful, the most bewitching place, Sutcombe," Vivienne said from the cosy nest in which Nina had bestowed her. "The 'saloon' is the large hut where the men lived. We have arranged that you are to sleep in a corner of it—for the other hut is not so comfortable, Decima says. She thinks of everything; indeed, she is as wonderful as the island! I tell her she is the fairy of the enchanted spot, and that presently she will wave her hand and we shall wake up to find we are on board the Ariel and that we have been asleep and dreaming. Have you looked at those lumps of gold again, Sutcombe? Are you sure they won't turn into 'chunks' of just common rock? Can you realize yet this good fortune of ours?"

"No," he said. "I can only realize that she has made us rich again, that— I'll go and see if I can help her."

When he went down to the saloon, carrying some provisions with him, Nina was sitting over the fire she had made, her head resting on her hands, her eyes fixed dreamily and sadly on the blaze. Her whole pose reminded him of Millais' exquisite "Cinderella," and he stopped and looked down at her for a moment with his heart's longing in his frank blue eyes; and the longing slid into a yearning to pierce the secret of the sad face that she turned to him, sad though she smiled and said, brightly enough:

"It is nearly boiling. Have you brought the tea? It is past Lady Vivienne's time, you know."

"Yes, here's the tea," he said. "But I was not thinking of Vivienne, Decima, but of you. How could I think of any one else at such a moment? To speak of thanks"—he made a gesture of despair—"but if you knew how full my heart is—"

"Don't!" she said, quickly, and with a touch of reproach. "Have I even tried to thank you both for all your goodness to me? Be as generous!" She laughed up at him through the thin veil of sadness. "There! It is boiling at last. The teapot! Thanks. Now, if you'll carry the kettle—"

She gave him no time for more words, but talked quickly and brightly as she led the way back to the ladies' hut. Her effort at cheerfulness did not end here, and proved successful, for, notwithstanding the shadow of the past which hung over her, the fact that she had been able to befriend these two who had been so good to her uplifted her.

"We shall have to work hard," she said, as she poured out the tea, "for a week is not a long time."

"We can send the Ariel away again, or we can come back, now that we know the way here," said Sutcombe eagerly, for the thought that they three were alone on this island, that he should see her nearly every hour of the day was a secret joy to him; but Nina did not respond.

"You will soon tire of the solitude," she said in a low voice. "To-morrow I will take you were we—I saw some of the gold. There is a spade"—she winced as the scene of the burial of her father and poor Fleming rose before her—"and some other tools we brought from the wreck; and while you are getting the gold, I will go and fish."

"You fish! Why, how did you learn, who taught you?" cried Vivienne.

"I—I—have watched—people fishing," said Nina.

Vivienne looked round wonderingly. "Oh, it's just a dream, as I say!" she laughed. "Think of it, Decima! Here are you and we two sitting here on this remote island, just we three on this fairy isle, and far away in giddy London, with its electric lights and its ceaseless crowds, are our friends, the people we know, leading the same old dreary, monotonous lives, in the same old, smoky air. Why, Decima, do you realize that they are just at this moment—or is the time different?—thronging to the Momus to see the latest successful play? If they could only see the author!"

They busied themselves with the necessary work of this most realistic picnic until nearly nightfall, and at last Vivienne, suddenly growing tired with the excitement, was persuaded by Nina to go to bed.

Sutcombe had said good-night and gone off to his quarters in the saloon; but he could not sleep, and after awhile he got up and went down to the beach and looked at the moonlit sea, as Vane Mannering had looked on many such a night. Presently, half unconsciously, he went up toward the other huts. The one in which he had left the two girls was dark, all was still; but as he turned he saw a dim light in the other hut, the hut he had not yet entered. Surprised and curious, he approached it noiselessly and cautiously, and looked in through the now gaping logs. As he did so the sound of sobbing reached him. It came from Nina, who was kneeling beside the rough bed, her arms outstretched on it, her hands closed over a paper; a ring lay on the bed-rug as if it had fallen from her hand. Her attitude, so full of the abandon of grief and despair, smote Sutcombe to the heart.

Why was she kneeling there, in that rough hut on that desolate island, her eyes streaming with tears, her lips quivering with grief? His face went white, and his own lips twitched with an unspoken dread, a vague presentiment. He remained there for a moment only, for the sacredness of her grief smote upon him like a reproach; and he moved away and stood, with folded arms and bent head, pondering gloomily.

He lost all sense of time, of the fact that she might find him there, and he started as the rough door opened and she came out. The tears were still shining in her eyes, which

WHY YOU SHOULD USE
Red Rose Tea
Because of the care in Selection and Blending.
My agents in the east are expert tea tasters, and every lot of tea that is sent down from the Gardens has to pass their inspection. They take samples from the chests and carefully taste them, then if the tea is fully up to the Red Rose standard, it is accepted and shipped; if not it is rejected.
The most important test of all, however, is when the tea arrives here, as during the passage through the Red Sea, the very great heat often affects the Tea very seriously. Immediately on arrival, samples are taken from each lot and subjected to the most rigid tests, and only those teas which have retained all their original flavor and strength are used for Red Rose (the balance is jobbed off in bulk).
When blended and ready to be put into sealed packages, it is tested again just to make sure no mistake has been made in the blending; nothing is left to chance.
Will you test us by ordering a package?

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

Timely Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

FARM OF A HUMORIST.

The humorist George Ade has described his "farm" to an interviewer. His description is a caricature of the expensive tastes of plutocrats in the equipment of their farms they take up for hobbies. "His herd," he says, "lives in a stable, the like of which has never been seen in the country. It looks like a club house inside. The cows' box stalls have malachite pillows, and nouveau art bronze decorations serve for scratching posts. The runlets of water through the stalls for drinking purposes go through little troughs of purest topaz, and the racks whence the cows twitch hand-weeded clover are barred with silver. Overhead, each cow's name is set with brilliants, with electric lights behind. The cows are named from jewels, and each cow's namestone is used; rubies, diamonds, opals, pearls, all shine in order there. The attention to detail is seen when one looks at Mr. Ade's milk pails. Each one is a piece of pure rock crystal. Celluloid was tried, but a pail exploded over a cow one night and glass pails broke. All the fences on the farm are of radium. This obviates the necessity of any lighting apparatus whatever on the roads, for visitors drive between lines of light. And all the crops are grown by artificial light; electric lights dot all the fields, and on dark, foggy nights the Ade farm throws up a glow from its 8700 acres like that over a great city. Some of the corn grows so fast under this light that it has to be cut back every morning. Nor does this crop fear frost or 'cold spells' to retard growth; between the rows run electric heaters, and the crops go right along, night and day."

DRINK AND INDIGESTION.

As has been said, man requires a certain amount of fluid, between two and three pints daily. Sometimes this is furnished by the food. All food contains some water, and many of the vegetables are little besides water. Most people do not drink enough water. Much has been said about the ill-effects of taking too much water with meals. The danger has been exaggerated Water promotes the tissue changes in the human body; men are like plants in needing a great deal of water to carry on the functions of the body and to make up for the waste which constantly goes on, especially in working or in hot weather inducing perspiration. The complexion and the whole skin is improved by drinking water. Lately much has been said about the free use of distilled water in promoting health and preventing the swelling of the joints from gout and rheumatism, both of which are due to improper assimilation.

That there was ever a time when tea and coffee were unknown seems well nigh incredible. But such is the case, and we doubt not it would be just as well for the human race if they had remained unknown. Both retard digestion, so the experimenters say. Coffee acts upon the heart, tea on the digestion and nerves. Do not let your children use tea or coffee until they are grown. Alcoholic drinks in moderate quantities aid digestion, and in some respects are not as pernicious as tea and coffee, but it is a great mistake to have them on the table for daily use. If there is an inherited tendency to alcoholism, constant use will develop it, to the sorrow and shame of those concerned.—Health.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Cough in Boar.—A Chester White boar, six months old, seems to breathe with difficulty. Some time since he would be attacked by severe cough at each feeding time, or rather when beginning to eat. We have good tight piggery, no drafts, no heat, plenty of ventilation, cement floor, straw bedding. Pills run at large in pasture till cold weather. (Mix in feed 1 oz. epsom salts; then three times a day give in a little milk three drops hom. tincture bryonia. Report in a week, referring to this page.)

Quarter Swollen. — Cow has one quarter of bag swollen hard: seems to be very sore; cannot get any milk out of it. (Give 3 oz. spirits of turpentine, 8 oz. linseed oil and 3 dr. fluid extract of colchicum root; repeat next day. Rub quarter twice a day with some of the following:—Spirits of turpentine and raw oil, of each 4 oz.; aqua ammonia, 1 1-2 oz.; vinegar, 1 qt.; mix. Rub a little tincture of opium on the teat twice a day. Use a safety milking instrument to milk the quarter. Feed bran and hay or corn fodder.)

Capped Hock.—Four-year-old mare has capped hock of two years' standing. It was very large at first; has been reduced to smaller size, about one inch by one-half, very loose under the skin. It was treated a year ago with a balsam, which I did not like the action of. This summer have applied tincture iodine and one part hemlock oil and two parts sweet oil; do not like this, either. One man man wants to buy her, and intends to cut swelling out. Is this a safe operation? (Some of the treatment has made the swelling hard to absorb; it is a very old thickening now, and therefore it will take much more time, patience and treatment than would have been necessary at the first. An operation is a very dangerous thing, and is neither necessary nor desirable. Iodide potass, 4 oz.; water, 1 qt.; mix. Give half an ounce in feed twice a day. Rub some of the following ointment on cap once a day: Powdered iodide potass., 2 dr.; powdered iodine, 4 dr.; glycerine, 1 oz.; vaseline, 3 oz.; mix. Report in two weeks and refer to this page.)

Udder Swollen.—A cow went dry about six weeks ago; two weeks ago I noticed one quarter of bag was badly caked and swollen. She is quite an old cow; comes in in April; has good appetite, eats grain and hay all right.—A.E.C. (Give a pound of epsom salts. Mix in feed an ounce of powdered saltpetre twice a day for a week. Rub the quarter with alcohol twice a day; feed hay and bran. Write again if she is not in good order in a week or ten days. Refer to this page. Keep quarter milked out.)

INQUIRIES FROM READERS.

Asparagus Bed.—Please give directions for making an asparagus bed, and if preference should be given to points of the compass, as to which way the rows should be planted. A. R.R. (In making asparagus beds it is probably better in most cases to run the rows east and west, especially if an early crop is desired. East and west rows catch the sun to the best advantage, and therefore come on somewhat earlier than those running north and south. This difference is especially marked if the rows are banked up. To establish a bed, the soil should be very thoroughly cultivated. Deep, loose, well-drained soil should be chosen in the first place, and this should be plowed two or three times, and as deeply as possible. The plants should then be set in the spring, two-year-old plants being preferred. Different growers plant at different distances, but rows three and one-half feet apart, with the plants 20 to 24 inches in the row, will give good results. Such a bed properly cared for will give a fair cutting the second year, and should last for several years.

In order to make money out of poultry, as a specialty, whether in selling eggs alone or handling and selling pure breeding stock, it is necessary to commence at the bottom round of the poultry business. The boy or young man can first study the principles of poultry-keeping from books and farm journals, but he must have the actual experience to determine whether he can make the business pay,

The best plan is to commence with just a few hens. They should be ready to begin laying before cold weather sets in, and the early spring pullet is needed for this purpose. A good plan is to buy a few such pullets of some poultryman who makes a business of hatching out early chickens. Such early-hatched pullets moult early in the fall and get ready for laying winter eggs, other conditions being equal.

I know a young man who is quite successful in breeding pure bred poultry and in getting his pullets to lay all winter, no matter how cold it is. Last winter his hens laid every day, in spite of the extremely cold weather. This young man started with almost a single fowl. He had no fancy poultry house or conveniences to commence with, but made what was actually needed as time passed along. He secured some eggs and managed to induce an old hen to sit early enough to get his chicks in early March. He fixed up an old shed alongside the barn, and made it warm by means of tarred paper, thus excluding cold drafts.

While these chicks were growing, he read and studied everything he could find pertaining to the business. During the following summer he prepared the shed and arranged it so that plenty of sunlight could reach all portions of the interior. Roosting poles and nest boxes were made detachable, in order to be taken out for cleaning and disinfecting. The earth floor was cleaned frequently and kept well littered with straw and chaff.

His one room answered for a scratching floor as well as for other purposes. The roosting poles were at one side, with a sloping platform underneath. The nest boxes were soap boxes, etc., laid at one side and partially covered, so as to exclude the strong light. The expense was reduced to almost nothing in starting this poultry plant.

The secret of this young man's success right from the start has been in carefully studying the business, and thoroughly attending to every minute detail. Nothing escapes his watchful eye, and his "chores" are regularly attended to, night and morning, every day in the year. He gets eggs every day during the cold weather, and they are bringing him a special price from special customers. The eggs are guaranteed to be fresh, and our friend cannot begin to supply the demand. The secret is simple. The early spring pullets moulted early in the fall. They were well cared for and fed a variety of food, according to the season. Fresh water is given daily, meat scrapes, bone, grit, vegetables, etc. Small grain is fed, and a moderate amount of corn.

The grain is scattered in the straw and chaff, and the hens are thus made to hustle. This physical exercise is needed by every laying hen, and she relishes the opportunity. The pullet that will stay on the roost when feed is thrown into the straw is a "wall flower," sick, or too lazy to live. If she repeats the offence decapitate her and utilize the remains in some way.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

Breast of Lamb. — Trim lamb nicely, removing bones, and spread on inside a layer of bread crumbs, mixed with an egg and two tablespoonfuls of finely shredded bacon, with salt and pepper to season. Roll and tie the lamb in compact shape, and place it, with the bones, in a saucepan. Dredge with flour, and brown carefully. Add a quart can of tomatoes and a scant pint of boiling water. Cook gently for a full hour, adding salt and cayenne to season the tomatoes properly. Remove the cord and serve with the tomato sauce. French peas may be substituted for the canned tomato.

Corned Beef. — Tomatoes cooked with macaroni in a brown sauce make an excellent accompaniment for corned beef. The meat is simply heated by setting the can in hot water for half an hour. Brown in a large saucepan two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter, add a pint of boiling water, a quart can of tomatoes, seasoning highly with salt and paprika, and a mere suggestion of scraped onion. Stew for half an hour, then add a large cupful of macaroni, broken in convenient lengths. When the macaroni is tender, put the beef in the centre of a large platter and dish the macaroni, with the tomato sauce, around it.

Chicken With Mushroom.—Of the different brands of canned chicken in the market, it is said that a great proportion consist chiefly of veal and pork, but even these can be used to advantage with mushrooms, while the combination with good, genuine chicken is one of the tid-bits of gastronomy. Having opened a can of mushrooms, put a large tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, add one of flour and stir over the fire until lightly colored. Mix in gradually the liquor from the mushrooms, adding a little water if necessary. Like all sauces of this kind, it should be just thick enough to coat the spoon and perfectly smooth. Season with salt and white pepper, and add the mushrooms Simmer for five minutes, and pour round the chicken, already heated in the can, and dish.

Cauliflower, string beans, and various other canned vegetables are served most acceptably in a white sauce, made as often described, with milk or half milk, in place of water, after rubbing the butter and flour smoothly together without browning. A variation is made by arranging with the sauce in layers in a baking dish, crumbing over the top, dotting with butter and browning lighly. Dorothy.

Communion Bread. — What is the proper way of preparing and making bread for communion service in churches?—N. R. (We believe that most Protestant churches use ordinary bread for this purpose. The Roman Catholic uses an unleavened wafer, so thin as to be translucent, made, we are told, by nuns, and dried in the sun instead of being cooked. A similar unleavened wafer is also used in many Protestant Episcopal churches.)

Died at Gananoque.

Mrs. J. Williamson, of this city, has just returned from Gananoque, where she had been attending the funeral of her father, who died of typhoid fever, after a short illness. The Gananoque Journal had the following obituary notice of the deceased:

Mr. James Elliott, who has resided on Stone street north for several years, died on Sunday, March 19th, aged 63 years. The deceased was born in the north of Ireland, but came to this country many years ago. He had resided in London, Belleville, Cataraqui, and for some time near the South Lake bridge, where he conducted a pottery business, which he removed to town lately. He was twice married, his second wife being a Miss Stoliker, who survives with three sons. He was a prominent Orangeman. Mr. A. Elliott, of Belleville, a brother, Mrs. Williamson, of the same place, a daughter by his first wife, came down to attend the funeral, which was held on Monday to the Gananoque cemetery. John and Wm. Elliott, of Aultsville, are half-brothers.

YOU ALSO.

What we have done for others we can do for you in the relief from eyestrain and its effects on the nervous system, etc. Of late we have had many serious cases of this kind, some of them sent to us by their physicians, and by correcting the eyestrain with the proper glasses all the trouble in other respects has disappeared, though in some cases of many years' standing. Physicians are finding out that it is useless to try and cure diseases produced by eyestrain with medicine. The only real cure is to correct the error of refraction by the proper glasses. That is what we do. If your pain in eyes or headache, general debility, stomach trouble, etc., is not caused by eyestrain we will tell you so, in order that you may have your physician treat you for what may be relieved with medicine. — Alex. Council Heard a Grist of Fish Stories Last Night.

REPRESENTATIVES OF FOREST AND STREAM CLUB AND NET FISHERMEN DISCUSS THE QUESTION, "SHOULD NET FISHING BE PROHIBITED?" FOR THREE HOURS — A SORT OF COMPROMISE RESOLUTION PASSED.

At a meeting of the City Council held on the evening of Monday, February 20th, a motion was adopted concurring in a petition re net fishing. The petition asked that the Government investigate the matter of net fishing and also, for a period of five years, prohibit it in the Bay of Quinte and its tributaries.

The net fishermen objected to the proposed legislation and the Council was requested to meet representatives of both sides and have the matter discussed pro and con. A special meeting of the Council was accordingly held last evening, and for nearly three hours fish talk was heard.

Three aldermen were absent, viz., Messrs. McCrodan, Paterson and Cooper. A large delegation of net fishermen and citizens was present.

His Worship stated the object of the meeting, namely to consider the matter of net fishing in the bay.

It was suggested and agreed to that five speakers upon each side be heard, but this rule was infringed upon before the meeting closed. The result of the meeting was that considerable information was imparted.

Ald. Sinclair said that the Council took action in this matter on account of a petition which was presented asking for the abolition of net fishing for five years, and suggested that the members of the Forest and Stream Club should first speak and give reasons for the faith that was in them, when asking for the endorsation of such a petition.

On motion the petition was read, which in substance was that net fishing be prohibited in the bay and its tributaries for five years.

Mr. Templeton said a discussion of this matter would result in good. The law, he claimed, had been glaringly violated. What had become of the bass? They are not in the bay at present. Net fishing, he claimed, was responsible for the depleting of the bay of bass. Hoop nets, he believed, had resulted in killing off the maskinonge, which were also scarce. He understood that nets to-day were placed near Zwick's Island.

Mr. McCargar said he had no axe to grind, either with the fishermen or the Forest and Stream Club. He had advocated the putting in of nets on the 1st of October until the spring, say the 1st of April. They may catch a few game fish, but it will be only an occasional bass that is caught in a hoop net. It would, in his opinion, be a bad precedent to prohibit net fishing altogether. The fishermen are now prepared to stop net fishing in the spring and not set a net until the 1st day of October. They desire to be allowed to net fish from this period until the 1st of April or the 1st of May. In his opinion, if net fishing is prohibited for five years, there would not then be any more bass than there is to-day, as the coarse fish would eat them up.

Ald. Marsh—"Do the fishermen make a business of catching dog fish?"

Mr. Belnap — "Yes. And they are useless and destroy other good fish."

Mr. Templeton — "Have any licenses been granted this spring? I understand that some nets are on Zwick's Island at present."

Mr. McCargar — "No licenses have yet been granted this year."

Col. Ponton asked why the fishermen wanted until the last day of April to use nets. Why not make it until 1st of April?

Mr. McCargar did not think it would be right to deprive the fishermen of the month of April altogether.

Col. Ponton said that the petition asked that this matter be thoroughly investigated by the department. Bass fishing was wiped out, through some cause. All the Forest and Stream Club ask is that both sides be heard in this matter. He made the charge that the Buffalo Fish Company were at the back of the fishermen in this matter. This was a great corporation. All we ask is that the game fish in our bay be protected. Nets were put under the ice near Zwick's Island to-day, and no doubt nets were being placed in other parts of the bay. The petition was for the purpose of protecting Belleville's rights in regard to fishing. Summer guests who used to come here do not come here now because we have not that attraction we used to have, namely, bass fishing. We ask that, after an investigation, stringent measures in this matter be adopted, if thought practicable. We have no other feeling in this matter than that of protection to the bass.

Ald. Green asked Col. Ponton how long net fishing had been in vogue here.

Col. Ponton — "I cannot say. We object to the excessive fishing and ask that restrictive measures be passed. We do not desire to prohibit the fishermen from making a living."

Mr. McCargar — "I will bet $5 that bass are not caught in the nets put out near Zwick's Island." Continuing, he said he was not the fishery officer now.

Col. Ponton — "I did not come here to bet, but to discuss this matter."

Mr. D. Belnap said the Buffalo Fish Company were not backing up the fishermen in any way. He had been encouraged by the Government to invest his all in fishing materials, and it was his livelihood. Now this petition asked that his means of supporting his family be taken away for five years. Was this fair? If they did away with net fishing the dog-fish will do away with the bass. He had fished 33 years under license and he had never caught a maskinonge with a hoop net. He did not like the idea of giving up his business altogether for five years. There was planty of bass in the Bay of Quinte to-day. Some Americans three years ago took large quantities of bass out of the bay.

Mr. Thos. Ritchie said the game fish, if they had been preserved, would have been a valuable asset to us. He had no desire to do anything that would deprive the fishermen of their livelihood. Years ago you could go out and catch bass upon any of the bars in the bay, but of late years the bass had been depleted. If we had good bass fishing here it would mean a considerable revenue to the city. Years ago salmon trout used to be caught in the bay, also other valuable fish. There was not the slightest doubt but that black bass and other game fish were not in our bay now. Of late he had been fishing in other lakes, which were filled with shad, and yet he was able to catch bass, showing that these fish can be caught where shad are prevalent. Large quantities of bass have been caught in gill nets, and he had seen them in these nets. We have valuable assets in our fish, and the Government, he contended, had to take some measures to protect them. The matter should, in his opinion, be thoroughly investigated.

Ald. Green said there were conflicting statements made as to bass being scarce. Is it possible that there is some other cause than that of net fishing which depletes the bass in the bay?

Mr. Ritchie said that gradually, from year to year, the depletion of bass has been going on. He could attribute it to no other cause than the use of gill nets.

The Mayor — "Have the number of nets set in the bay increased of late years?"

Mr. Ritchie — "I am not in a position to answer that question."

Ald. Panter—"Does the Forest and Stream Club want a total prohibition of net fishing for five years?" He thought that this would be a hardship to the fishermen.

Mr. Ritchie—"My idea is that the Government should investigate this matter, this to be done by an expert."

Ald. Panter—"Do you think it would be wise to prohibit net fishing for the period mentioned in the petition?"

Mr. Ritchie—"Let the Government appoint a commission and the matter be presented in its various phases."

Ald. Panter suggested that a conference be held between the fishermen and the Forest and Stream Club, and some arrangement of an amicable nature might be arrived at.

Mr. C. M. Stork said that a few years ago, namely, in 1898, he was on one afternoon, in the vicinity of Snake Island, when he lifted a gill net and it was swarming with bass. In his estimation, there were at least 10,000 of these fish. He did not, however, think the hoop nets were deadly to the black bass.

Mr. W. P. Clarke said he had seen a number of gill nets lifted and had seen but very few bass in them. Bass were scarce here now, but he was not prepared to say why they were scarce. It may be because the bay is getting filled with weeds, and fast becoming a pike ground.

Mr. C. C. Leavens said he could not agree with the petition to prohibit net fishing for five years, as it meant to take away the livelihood of a number of families. In Georgian Bay last year, bass were scarce and it was thought it was because the water was high and carried refuse into the water, thereby giving the fish all the food they desired.

Col. Ponton said nets have increased in some localities on the bay. The last few years nets have been placed in the bay in the spring at certain points. The fishermen, he thought, should stop that.

Mr. Belnap—"Can the fisherman, artisan, merchant or farmer live by working two or three months out of the year? I think not. All the fisherman has is invested in material, and he should not be deprived of his living."

Ald. Green thought the Government understood this matter. The fish was, no doubt, a valuable asset. He thought it would be a wise thing for the members of the Forest and Stream Club and the fishermen to get together and have a conference and arrive at some basis, which might be presented to the Government.

Mr. McCargar said that all fish in the Bay of Quinte spawn in the spring of the year, and he would advocate the prohibition of spring fishing.

Ald. Sinclair said that after listening to the arguments he came to the conclusion that the Forest and Stream Club and the fishermen were earnest in this matter and wanted to do what was right. It had been stated that the law had been violated, and that spawning took place in the spring. These were matters which should be considered, not by the Council, which was not in a position to deal with it, but by the parties interested.

Ald. Marsh asked if either or both sides would be agreeable to the cessation of net fishing being placed at April 15th?

Ald. Panter suggested that the members of the Forest and Stream Club and the fishermen get together and arrive at some amicable arrangement, and he felt confident the Council would back them up in such an arrangement. This would have a better effect upon the Government than any resolution coming from the Council alone.

Ald. Marsh moved, seconded by Ald. Sinclair, "That the City Council concur in the general expression of opinion given by the net fishermen and representatives of the Forest and Stream Club and other citizens representing a largely-signed petition for presentation to the Legislature regarding the total or partial suppression of net fishing in the Bay of Quinte, and would request the Ontario Legislature to have the matter of the protection of merchantable and game fish investigated and reported upon by an independent official or officials or commission and suitable legislation effected whereby the livelihood of the fishermen may be suitably protected, and the commercial and sporting interests of the City of Belleville and vicinity be preserved to the residents of the district; and in the meantime, while the investigation is taking place, and the resultant legislation is being prepared, we would recommend the issuing of licenses for net fishing for the years 1905 and 1906, good from October 1st to April 15th, inclusive. And that the motion passed on February 20th be and is hereby rescinded."

Although the resolution prevailed it did not meet with the approval of the fishermen, who desire to use gill and hoop nets until the 1st of May.

Council adjourned.

ANNUAL TEA MEETING OF BAPTIST CHURCH.

TOOK PLACE LAST NIGHT — ENJOYABLE EVENING SPENT BY LARGE GATHERING.

The annual tea meeting of the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church was held last night, the event this year taking special significance inasmuch as it also marked the 38th anniversary of the local church's opening. Tea was served in the Sunday school room, and the ladies provided a most generous and toothsome repast, which was done full justice to. At the conclusion of the tea an entertainment was given in the church, there being a large audience present. Rev. O. C. Elliott, pastor of the church, made a witty and acceptable chairman. The choir sang two anthems, with excellent precision; Miss Katie Riggs and Mr. Wm. Kelly sang a pretty duet, "The Gates of Gold," in a highly pleasing way; Mr. Joyce sang a number; Miss Trotter gave two readings, to the evident delight of the audience, and Miss Jessie Tuite, in Scotch dialect readings, was very good, indeed. Rev. Mr. Hubly, rector of Emmanuel R. E. Church, voiced the neighborly and kindly feelings which had always existed between the Reformed Episcopalians and Baptists. The entertainment was over at a seasonable hour, and was voted a huge success by everybody who attended.

LISTEN FOR THE WHISTLE TO MORROW AFTERNOON.

FIRES WERE STARTED AT THE GREAT CEMENT PLANT AT POINT ANN THIS MORNING, AND STEAM GOT UP FOR THE FIRST TIME.

Chief Engineer English was found in extra good humor this forenoon when the fires was started under the great boilers at Point Ann for the first time.

Soon the hissing steam commenced to sing and Mr. English broke out with, "you don't know how good I feel, I would a thousand times sooner hear that steam than the great Pittsburg Orchestra." He asks us to invite the citizens to listen for the first toot of the whistle to-morrow afternoon. Barring accidents, the whistle will blow at intervals from 3 o'clock until 5.30 p.m. Steam once up, the fires will not be allowed to go out again, and if delivery of the balance of machinery can be got, as promised by the manufacturers, Mr. English thinks that in two weeks' time he will be able to show samples of cement.

Visitors will not be allowed in the plant from now on without a pass.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

DORA THORNE.

"Dora Thorne," the idol of those impressionable and romantic young girls, who think Bertha M. Clay "too sweet for anything," is on the stage with lords and ladies and sirs and commoners who stalked through the novel. The play bids fair to outrival the popularity of the book, as it is being presented to large audiences throughout the country, and everywhere are manifestations of general approval. Miss Cuba Niblo heads a competent cast of players, and, in the title role, is seen to excellent advantage. "Dora Thorne" will be seen at the Carman on Monday, April 3.

LIEUT. GORDON B. JOHNSON WRITES ENTERTAININGLY.

OF AFFAIRS IN CEYLON, WHERE HE WAS STATIONED WHEN THE LETTER WAS WRITTEN.

The following are extracts from a letter, written on February 23rd from a remote part of the Island of Ceylon, Nuwara Eliya, 6,200 feet above sea level, and received on Saturday last by ex-Mayor J. W. Johnson from his son, Lieutenant Gordon B. Johnson, of the Royal Engineers:

"I came up here in the hills for 10 days on the 4th inst., and got orders to stay the rest of the month to take over duty from a captain who was going home, and I am also in command of the troops stationed here. The air in this region is cold, especially at night, when there is sometimes frost, the sun is warm and the air dry. In fact, it is much like England in summer, only colder at night and more sun. It is a great change from Colombo, and a few weeks here tones a man right up, after being over a year in the "Turkish bath," Colombo, where one becomes pale and washed out.

The scenery is fine and there are lots of fine drives and walks. Nuwara Eliya is in a basin 6,200 feet above Colombo and surrounded by mountains. There is a bank, a shop, a number of bungalows, some native houses, and a couple of small hotels and clubs. It really is no town at all, merely the open country. I am staying at the Grand Hotel, which is very comfortable and with very good food, well cooked and served.

People come here from as far as Singapore, three or four days' sail from Ceylon, merely to get cool, as there are no mountains in the Straits Settlements. It takes all day or all night to get here from Colombo, steadily climbing up the mountains.

Sir Thomas Lipton, of "Shamrock" fame, has been staying here at the "Grand" for several days. I have got to know him quite well. He is a very genial man, and has told me some very funny stories, including some experiences of himself with King Edward, whose personal friend he is. He showed me a beautiful cigarette case given to him by the King, whose monogram was on it, and he also gave me one of the King's cigarettes, and I can congratulate King Edward on his good taste and excellent judgment. Sir Thomas seems to like my company and we have had several (for me) very interesting hours together. He is out here to look after his tea estates. He has a large motor-car to carry him around, and has in his train or party several men, secretary, business men, etc. It is funny to see the commotion which surrounds the person of a millionaire. Several waiters hand him his napkin and others take away his plate. He is surrounded by a sort of movement of excitement, caused by the people in his party or others looking after his interests. He tells me he used to be three or four times a week with the King when the latter was Prince of Wales, and less frequently now. He dined with him just before coming out here.

Nothing further about the intentions of the War Office with regard to Ceylon, except that all work at Trincomali has been stopped, and our fellows there have been doing nothing for a couple of months, expecting all the time to be ordered away. It is known Trincomali is to be abandoned, but no date has been given. As there are three R. E. lieutenants there, and as I have been in the Island longer than any of them, I expect I shall be the first to be ordered home when Trincomali is deserted, and orders should come soon, as moves ought to take place before March 31st, which is the end of the Army financial year.

ALLEGED MISAPPROPRIATION.

W. H. Hubble, of Frankford, was yesterday afternoon charged before Magistrate Flint with appropriating money to his own use, which Henry Black claimed to have a claim on. From the evidence of Black it appeared that Hubble killed some cattle and pigs and sold the same, and he (Black) did not receive his just share of the proceeds as a partner of Hubble. The evidence of Hubble was contrary to that of Black, he alleging he had paid him. The case was enlarged for one week. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown and Mr. Carnew the defendant.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used: it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

Rothschilds' Concession re Three Per Cent. Causes Surprise.

London, March 28.—(C. A. P.)—The city is somewhat surprised at the decision of Rothschild & Sons to bring out £3,200,000 of 3 per cent. sterling bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific at 95, especially after the Canadian Northern fiasco, which offered the same terms. Messrs. Rothschild, however, make a concession in giving a full half year's dividend at the beginning of October, instead of interest on the instalments paid only. It will be very interesting to see how things develop. At one time in the afternoon the issue was offered at 1-4 discount, but it was afterwards supported at par. The Canadian Northern issue stands at 1 1-4 discount.

Motors Affect Horsebreeding.

London, March 27.—(C. A. P.)—At one of the recent spring farm sales in the north of England there was a heavy fall in prices of cart horses. A prominent horse-breeder, asked by the Canadian Press the reason of the drop, replied that he attributed it to the increasing use of motor vehicles for town work. The motors are affecting the horse-breeders in many ways. Canadian breeders, if they have not already felt the effect of the motor invasion, are sure to do so, as the omnibus companies are among their best customers, and very soon the horse-drawn omnibus will be scarcely seen in London streets.

Fight San Jose Scale.

Toronto, March 28.—Secretary P. W. Hodgetts, of the Fruit Growers' Association, will continue this week his annual tour of the nurseries of the Niagara peninsula and the Essex fruit districts, with a view to seeing that the fumigating of stock for sale is being properly carried out. He has already completed part of the work, and finds that the nurserymen are living up to the regulations, all being anxious to guard against the San Jose scale. The outlook in this regard is not particularly bright in the Niagara and Essex districts, however. The scale continued to spread in both last season, and nurserymen and fruit growers anticipate a hard fight this year.

Robbers Cut Phone Wires.

Ottawa, March 28.—Three robbers entered the manor house of T. C. Keefer, C. M. G., at Rockliffe last night and held the engineer up at the point of a revolver and made him disgorge his watch and what money he had on his person. The robbers took the precaution of cutting the telephone wires before entering, to prevent an alarm. Chief de la Ronde has put entire detective staff on the case.

Mr. S. Till, St. John, N.B., writes: "I have, for ten years, been a sufferer from Asthma, which became worse each year. Our doctors finally could not help me: six bottles of Clarke's Kola Compound have completely cured me. I also know of several others in this city who have been cured by it."

FOR A LARGER ONTARIO

Premier of Ontario Writes Premier of the Dominion.

Correspondence With Reference to the Proposed Expansion of the Provincial Boundaries Laid on the Table of the Legislature—Sir Wilfrid Informs Hon. Mr. Whitney That He Had Forstalled the Dominion's Action.

Toronto, March 28.—In the Legislature yesterday the Premier laid on the table the correspondence between the Government and Sir Wilfrid Laurier with reference to the division of the territory of Keewatin, between the Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba.

The House sat about ten minutes and the only other matters touched upon were the selection of a committee to strike the standing committees, and an announcement by the Premier concerning the funeral of the late Andrew Miscampbell. Mr. Whitney said the death of Mr. Miscampbell, who was a former member of the House, had carried grief to a large number of his acquaintances.

Standing Committees.

The Premier moved that the following be the members of the special standing committee to prepare and report lists of members to compose the select standing committees: Attorney-General, Matheson, Willoughby, Preston (Lanark), Mahaffy, Thompson, (Simcoe), Hoyle, Clarke (Bruce), MacKay, Pense, Graham and Preston (Brant).

Mr. Whitney remarked, with a sly look across the floor, that on looking up last session's record he found that the striking committee had not reported for twenty-two days after it was appointed. He hoped the present committee would do better than that.

The correspondence with Sir Wilfrid Laurier is as follows:

Whitney to Laurier.

Toronto, March 2, 1905.

My Dear Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

I have noticed several statements in the press of the Province during the past week referring to an alleged proposed division, by the Dominion among the Provinces, of the territory lying to the south and west of James' Bay and Hudson Bay, and known as the territory of Keewatin.

Presumably the Province of Ontario should be entitled to a large portion of this territory, and should be heard with reference to any proposed division of it.

Assuming that such a division is in contemplation, I respectfully and earnestly urge upon you that before the details of such division be decided upon, or even considered, the Province of Ontario be allowed to submit to the Dominion Government for consideration with reference to such division, its claim to that portion of such territory as it may fairly urge should be allotted to it.

Yours faithfully.

(Signed) J. P. Whitney.

The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa.

Laurier to Whitney.

Ottawa, March 4, 1905.

My Dear Mr. Whitney:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 2nd of March. You have anticipated the action which I intend to take. The Province of Manitoba has asked us to have its territory extended to Hudson Bay. It seems to me that this is a matter in which the Province of Ontario might have an interest. I will ask the Secretary of State to send you an official copy of the claim of Manitoba. In the meantime, I send you one under cover.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) Wilfrid Laurier.

Hon. J. P. Whitney, Toronto.

Mr. Hoyle's Bill.

Mr. Hoyle (North Ontario) has given notice of his intention to introduce a bill to amend the Joint Stock Companies' Act, compelling companies to give complete information in their prospectuses of lands and money and also what commission is to be paid agents for soliciting subscriptions, so that investors may know just what the bona fides of the company is. This bill is patterned after the British act, and is designed to protect the public from wildcat schemes.

TORONTO TO HON. J. P. WHITNEY.

Queen City Representatives Honor the Premier of the Province.

Hon. J. P. Whitney, Premier of Ontario, was given a flattering reception in the Council chamber of the City Hall yesterday. The finest palms and flowering plants from the Park Commissioner's greenhouses were lavishly used to decorate. There was a large attendance of citizens, in addition to all of the heads of the civic departments, and loud applause greeted the Premier as he entered, escorted by Chairman Graham of the reception committee, and followed by Controller Ward, who preceded Hon. Mr. Foy and Hon. Dr. Pyne, the city's representatives in the Cabinet. Mayor Urquhart received the guests, and, escorting Hon. Mr. Whitney to a seat on his right, at once began the reading of the address.

The Civic Address.

To the Hon. James Pliny Whitney, K.C., Premier of the Province of Ontario:

"We, the mayor and council of the city of Toronto, take this, the first opportunity afforded us of congratulating you upon your accession to the high office of premier of the Province of Ontario. Representing as we do, without respect to their political views, the inhabitants of this city, it affords us much pleasure to know that the chief place in the councils of this great province is occupied by one so well fitted by his ability, integrity and experience to direct with skill and prudence the affairs of the government.

Appreciate Past; Hope in Future.

"Many of us have had occasion to meet you, while you were discharging your duties as a member of the legislative assembly, and later as leader of the opposition, and we are confident that the courtesy with which you met all the demands on your time, and the attention which you gave to the business of the hour, will be exercised, if possible, in a greater degree in the discharge of the duties of your present position; and we feel assured that nothing will be left undone on your part in furthering the development, protecting the interests, and economically and efficiently administering the affairs of our province.

City Will Help Government.

"Recognizing the fact that the welfare and prosperity of the province means the welfare and prosperity of its chief city, we have no hesitation in giving the assurance that it will always be the aim of this council to strengthen the hands of your government in everything which will tend, not only to the material, but also to the moral advancement of our people.

"In congratulating you upon your selection of colleagues, it is a pleasant duty to give expression to the pride and satisfaction with which our fellow citizens appreciate the honor which has been bestowed upon two of our worthy and popular representatives in the legislature.

Desired as a Resident.

"In offering you a hearty and cordial welcome to our city, we would express the hope that in the near future we may have the pleasure of learning that you have decided to reside permanently in Toronto. In this event we feel that we can confidently assure you that nothing will be left undone on the part of our citizens to make the residence here, not only of yourself, but of Mrs. Whitney and the other members of your family, pleasant and agreeable.

"We conclude with an earnest expression of hope that long life, prosperity and happiness may be vouchsafed to yourself and the members of your household."

After the applause had subsided, the Premier said it was with varied sensations that he heard the formal and somewhat elaborate expression of the acquiescence of the people of Toronto in the verdict given by the people of Ontario in regard to the Government of the Province. The function was another evidence of the good old British practice that from time to time the people should express officially their acquiescence in the Government of the day, and their acceptance of the verdict of the people. He hoped the rule in future would be continued as Governments came and went, and the will of the people as to who their rulers should be would be recognized. There was nothing of a party nature in the function. If it were not so, it would not have been as satisfactory to him as it was.

Delighted to Honor.

On the conclusion of Mr. Whitney's address, Controller Hubbard moved that the Council adjourn for 15 minutes, and during the interval the members and civic officials, with many representative citizens, were presented to him by the Mayor. The Premier then resumed his seat on the dais and Council concluded the business of the day, after which an informal levee was held in the members' room.

In Honor of the Dead.

The funeral services were held at the home of the late Andrew Miscampbell last evening by Rev. P. M. Macdonald, Cowan Avenue Presbyterian Church; Rev. P. F. Sinclair, of Sonya, Ont., and Rev. D. C. Hossock. Among those who were present were: Premier Whitney and the Honorables St. John, Matheson, Pyne, Monteith and Willoughby, W. R. Smyth, M. P. P., and Robert Gaina, M. P. P.

Wreaths have been sent by the Legislature, the Cabinet, the Opposition, Hon. Mr. St. John, Messrs. Gamey, Smyth and Gaina, representing New Ontario, Soo Masonic Lodge, Soo Conservative Association, and Ward 6 Conservative Association.

The remains were taken to Barrie this morning.

A CAUSE OF HEADACHE.

ONE VERY COMMON CAUSE, GENERALLY OVERLOOKED.

Headache is a symptom, an indication of derangement or disease in some organ, and the cause of the headache is difficult to locate because so many diseases have headache as a prominent symptom; derangement of the stomach and liver, heart trouble, kidney disease, lung trouble, eye strain or ill-fitting glasses all produce headaches and if we could always locate the organ which is at fault the cure of obstinate headaches would be a much simpler matter.

However, for that form of headache called frontal headache, pain back of the eyes and in forehead, the cause is now known to be catarrh of the head and throat; when the headache is located in back of head and neck it is often caused from catarrh of the stomach or liver.

At any rate, catarrh is the most common cause of such headaches and the cure of the catarrh causes a prompt disappearance of the headaches.

There is at present no treatment for catarrh so convenient and effective as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a new internal remedy in tablet form, composed of antiseptics like red gum, blood root, which act upon the blood and cause the elimination of the catarrhal poison from the system through the natural channels.

Miss Cora Ainsley, a prominent school teacher in one of our normal schools, speaks of her experience with catarrhal headaches and eulogizes Stuart's Catarrh Tablets as a cure for them. She says: "I suffered daily from severe frontal headache and pain in the back of the eyes, at times so intensely as to incapacitate me in my daily duties. I had suffered from catarrh, more or less for years, but never thought it was the cause of my headaches, but finally became convinced that such was the case because the headaches were always worse whenever I had a cold or fresh attack of catarrh.

"Stuart's Catarrh Tablets were highly recommended to me as a safe and pleasant catarrh cure and after using a few fifty cent boxes which I procured from my druggist's I was surprised and delighted to find that both the catarrh and headaches had gone for good."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are sold by druggists at fifty cents per package, under the guarantee of the proprietors that they contain absolutely no cocaine (found in so many catarrh cures), no opium (so common in cheap cough cures), nor any harmful drug. They contain simply the wholesome antiseptics necessary to destroy and drive from the system the germs of catarrhal disease.

Discussing the Peace Question.

Russia Outlines Conditions For Its Negotiation.

Has Russia Asked Delcasse to Act as Intermediary and Open Peace Negotiations With Japan?—No Intermediary Needed Says Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister at London—Attaches no Importance to Rumor.

St. Petersburg, March 29.—Russia has outlined the conditions under which she is prepared to negotiate peace.

It was stated last night with every semblance of authority that, thanks to the good offices of the United States and France, the question of peace had assumed practical shape.

Russia Seeks Peacemaker.

London, March 29.—A telegram from a northern European capital received in London yesterday afternoon says:

"I have just learned on reliable authority that Russia has asked Delcasse to act as intermediary and open peace negotiations with Japan.

"Delcasse has signified his willingness, but considers that Lansdowne's co-operation is essential to success."

No Intermediary Needed.

London, March 29.—"When peace negotiations commence it will be between Russia and Japan, and not through any intermediary," was Minister Hayashi's comment to the Associated Press last night, when shown the despatch from a northern European capital, stating that M. Delcasse, the French Foreign Minister, had been asked to act as an intermediary to open peace negotiations. Minister Hayashi said he attached no importance to the statement, but believed that France was trying to influence Russia to open negotiations for peace. "So far as I know," he added, no negotiations have been begun, but when Russia is ready to make terms Japan will be happy to consider them."

Minister Hayashi repeated his previous statements, that Japan is not noticing peace rumors but steadily preparing to prosecute the war to the bitter end.

LINEVITCH LACONIC.

Message from Russian Commander Causes Fear in St. Petersburg.

London, March 29.—The Times' St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs as follows:

"The entire absence of private and press telegrams from the front, together with a laconic message from Gen. Linevitch last night, dated Harbin and saying 'No reports from the armies,' evolves fears that communications have been cut and that the Japanese have turned the Russian positions."

Japs Move Forward.

Gunshu Pass, (108 Miles north of Tie Pass), Manchuria, March 29.—The Japanese are again moving forward and the Russian rear guard has fallen back from its position about thirteen miles north of Sipinghai (74 miles north of Tie Pass), to Chaoumiaodzi, which is situated 40 miles below Gunshu Pass.

Practically complete reports show that the Russian army sacrificed general commissariat stores to the amount of $1,250,000, and stores for an army corps amounting to $500,000, held at Mukden, most of it being set on fire. the boots and uniforms among the stores, of which the whole army was in need, arriving from Europe four days before the Russian retirement from Mukden. Gen. Kuropatkin ordered the removal of the stores, but orders was not executed. An investigation will be made in order to establish the responsibility.

Tied Linevitch's Hand.

St. Petersburg, March 29.—News has been received here that the Japanese are again forcing matters. Gen. Linevitch's position is regarded as precarious, and is causing extreme anxiety. In official circles in St. Petersburg the posibility of peace is now freely talked of. At both the Foreign Office and the Admiralty yesterday was heard the opinion expressed that it is within sight.

Sailors Die of Exposure.

Tokio, March 29.—Two of the crew of the British steamer Marsh have died of exposure. The rest of the men rescued have arrived at Hakodate.

Minor State of Siege Declared.

Riga, Russia, March 29.—The Minister of the Interior has ordered the proclamation of a minor state of siege in the Government of Livonia.

BIG FIRE AT WINNIPEG.

J. Y. Griffin & Co.'s Pork Factory in Flames—Loss $200,000.

Winnipeg, March 29.—J. Y. Griffin & Co.'s pork packing establishment, located on the Red River banks, opposite this city, was in flames at midnight, and will be a total loss. The factory is the largest in the west. The loss will be about $200,000.

The entire factory was burned. There was a fierce wind blowing, accompanied by snow and sleet, but the firemen prevented the spread of the flames to the opposite side of the river, where are located big lumber yards and the Ogilvie mills. The Louise traffic bridge was damaged.

Queen Visits Gibraltar.

Gibraltar, March 29.—The British Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with Queen Alexandra and party on board, entered the bay here yesterday amid the thunder of salutes from the Atlantic fleet, all the vessels of which were dressed with flags and manned with cheering blue jackets. This is the first time a Queen of England has visited Gibraltar in the history of the famous rock. The Queen returned to the Royal yacht at 6.30 p. m. A state banquet was given last night aboard the yacht.

Another Paul Kruger Appears.

Pittsburg, March 29.—Charles Turner, aged 30 years, a convict in the Western Pennsylvania Penitentiary, was murdered at that institution yesterday by Paul Kruger, another convict, during an altercation while at work.

MACEDONIAN SITUATION.

Lord Lansdowne Gives Some Interest-Information in the House of Lords on the Question.

London, March 29.—The House of Lords discussed the Macedonian situation last night. Lord Lytton (Conservative) called attention to the condition of affairs in that part of the world. He said that the Austro-Russian reform scheme was a failure and it was hopeless to expect anything from Russia or Austria. The rule of Turkey was an anomaly in civilized Europe and a perpetual menace to peace.

Some Progress Made.

Foreign Secretary Lansdowne said some progress had been made, but he realized that action was urgent on the grounds of humanity and because the existing conditions menaced the peace of Europe. Great Britain, however, had less responsibility than any of the powers, and however desirable it was impossible for Great Britain to send a fleet to Constantinople or any army of invasion into Macedonia. It was hardly likely that Russia and Austria would stand aside to find room for the western powers.

Financial Reforms.

The Foreign Secretary also said the British Government approved the latest scheme for financial reform. The Turkish Government proposed to raise the custom dues. Great Britain would not accept a proposition so injurious until convinced of its necessity. The Government of Great Britain had made certain propositions in connection with the scheme for reforms, but the Foreign Secretary asked that he be not required to give the details at present. He assured the House that the powers were presenting a united front in connection with Macedonia, and he believed the outcome of the present negotiations would be satisfactory.

International Control.

Lord Lansdowne further remarked that as a general indication of the manner in which the Government regarded the situation he might say that it was of the opinion that the question had reached a stage when all the powers had the right to make themselves heard. The finances of Macedonia must be so arranged as to provide adequately for the administration of Macedonia, guarantees must be provided that not any of the revenues, earmarked for the special benefit of Macedonia, can be diverted for other purposes, and, finally, the finances of Macedonia must be placed under international control.

The statement of Lord Lansdowne was greeted with cheers.

Convicts Escape.

Houston, Tex., March 29.—Twenty-eight Texas convicts on the plantation of J. B. S. House, of Houston, have escaped by sawing through the floor of the stockade with case knives.

To Settle Colombian Debt.

London, March 29.—Negotiations have been opened by Gen. Holguin, the European representative of the Republic of Colombia, with the council of the corporation of foreign bondholders with the object of trying to settle the Colombian debt.

THE AUTONOMY BILLS.

HOW THE QUESTION IS VIEWED BY A LEADING U. S. PAPER.

Buffalo Express: The fight over the school question in the Dominion Parliament has reached its final stage and in a comparatively few days it will be known whether or not Sir Wilfrid Laurier's ministry is to fall. Not in many years has a measure so stirred Dominion politics as has this one which creates the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, for it involves a consideration of provincial rights of the utmost importance. There is a general agreement, apparently, that the provinces should be established, but there is bitter disagreement regarding the educational clauses of the bill.

As was stated in The Express a few days ago, the issue is whether or not autonomy in school matters should be granted to the prospective provinces. The Premier holds that a clause of the British North America Act of 1867, which provides that nothing in the Act shall prejudicially affect "any rights or privileges which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union," is applicable to the territories which are to be raised. Sectarian schools already exist in those territories by act of Parliament and the application of the clause, it is understood, would mean the maintenance of these institutions, even though the great majority of voters objected.

The opposition to the bill as originally drafted was so threatening to the Government that Sir Wilfrid deemed it expedient, if not essentially wise, to amend the measure. The new form, which is now under discussion, probably marks the limit to which the Government is willing to go in the matter of concessions. It provides, in effect, that, while the Separate schools must be supported, they are to be unreservedly under the control of the Legislatures of the new provinces, as are to be the Public schools. The position of the Government is that the rights of the sectarians, which are respected now in the territories, cannot be destroyed when the territories become provinces. It is a clear constitutional requirement in the opinion of the Premier and his followers. In addition, the Government's position is justified by moral law, they say. It is recognized that the majority of voters in the prospective provinces may not wish to distribute public monies to sectarian schools. To prevent unfair treatment the Government proposes to make the agreement to support a condition to admission of the territories as provinces.

The attitude of the Conservatives on this question is set forth concisely in an amendment offered by the Opposition leader, R. L. Borden. This amendment declares that, upon the establishment of a province in the Northwest territories, "the Legislature of such province . . . . is entitled to and should enjoy full powers of provincial Government, including powers to exclusively make laws in relation to education." This is a demand for complete autonomy.

To make his position more plain, Mr. Borden said in his address before the House of Commons on Wednesday that he would fight to the end the introduction of any clause "forbidding the establishment of Separate schools in the Northwest," as he would consider such a prohibition as "absolutely in conflict with the provincial rights." In other words, as it would be unconstitutional to impose such a prohibition upon the voters of a new province, so it would be unconstitutional to force them to support Separate schools.

The issue is so clearly marked in this conflict and it involves a question of such grave importance to the Dominion that there is no room for wonder over the excitement which the measure has aroused among the Canadian people.

Literary Notes.

One of the striking features of the Review of Reviews for April is a sketch and estimate of Field Marshal Oyama, the victor of Mukden, by a Japanese writer, Adachi Kinnosuke.

The Review of Reviews for April publishes those passages in Dr. Osler's Baltimore address of February 22 which have provoked controversy.

The woman who drives a man to drink has no need of a whip.

Education gives a woman more words to talk with.

SUPPORT HOME TALENT.

A correspondent signing himself "Vox" writes to The Guelph Herald on a subject which one often hears discussed in this city. The letter is so pertinent, and contains so much good sense (particularly the last paragraph) that we herewith reproduce it:

Sir,—An interesting letter recently appeared in your columns giving particulars concerning and the programme of a St. Andrew's concert many years ago. The writer ventured to make the enquiry as to whether or not the concerts then given were really not more thoroughly enjoyed because those taking part in them were "home talent," and not as nowadays, artists from outside places, including the States. Apparently the writer was against the present practice of employing outside talent at heavy expense.

The subject is an interesting one and is worthy of public discussion. Primarily the idea is that local artists will not draw. This, in my humble opinion, is erroneous. Our musicians and vocalists are as a rule, attached to churches. At each church, no doubt, the congregation becomes fully acquainted with them, but only with them, not with those belonging to the other churches. Hence there is really to be found a body of musicians and vocalists who the public generally do not know and whom they would gladly pay to hear.

Of their qualifications too much cannot be said. Guelph is too modest and hides its musical talent under a bushel. Other cities recognize it, as may be proved by looking over the names of the artists who have left the city and accepted honorable positions offered them in other places.

Why do they leave us? Probably it is because they not only do not receive the appreciation which is their just due, but also because they are imposed upon. Though large fees are paid to outsiders, modest ones are refused to home talent. Our artists are expected to "give their services for nothing." To their credit be it said, that they are never backward in doing so. But it is not fair, just, or reasonable. They have spent many years and much money in attaining their positions and their reward is denied them. I should like to hear what storekeepers would say to a request such as this, and it is on exactly similar lines: "Oh, gentlemen, we are giving a social next week. Will you kindly, in accordance with the usual plan, give us the ice creams, bread, butter, tea, sugar, and everything else for nothing!" Our storekeepers are, I know, very liberal, and I am not attacking them in anyway, they are not open to any accusation of illiberality, and it is only the line of argument which is being pointed out.

The whole matter wants to be put on a proper business-like footing. The same question has been publicly discussed in Great Britain, owing to the great imposition on artists, and a determined stand has been made against it. It is now customary with the important firms, such as Broadwood & Chapple, together with the agents, to insert a clause in the agreements with artists, that they shall not perform anywhere so long as the contract lasts for a lesser fee than that which is paid under the agreement. The great social leaders such as the Duchess of Westminster, the Marquess of Lansdowne, will not lend their houses for charity concerts unless the artists are paid. It would have the effect of still further raising the estimation and status of a musical career, and contributing to the well being of a highly cultured and intellectual class.

A word may, with all due deference, be said to the artists themselves. People who go to concerts, go there to be entertained and to get their money's worth. They do not go to hear how clever the artists are. By this is meant the objection felt by an audience for "fireworks." A song which is full of difficult passages, rendering in the vast majority of cases the words utterly unintelligable, is listened to patiently, but is not generally appreciated. Compare this with a good old English ballad. The melody is so simple yet sweet that every word can be sung to be understood—if the singer cannot do this then he or she has not learnt the first requisite rule of singing, and should go back to school. Scotch, Irish and English ballads exist in hundreds which are never heard on a concert platform, and they would be a revelation to many an audience. Duets, trios, quartettes, glees, madrigals, etc., also abound. I should like to see a concert by our singers—who should be paid—giving solely a selection of such beautiful music.

This letter has spun out rather more than was intended; but the subject is one often discussed, and one which public sentiment should express itself upon. I will leave it to older heads than mine to deal with; only saying that my voice is not one which anyone would do more than to pay me to keep quiet if I attempted to sing, so that personally I do not hope to obtain anything when the class for whom I venture, unasked, to say a word, is justly recognized.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Another old proverb has been jolted badly. We all remember, of course, the old couplet, attributed to Benjamin Franklin,

"Early to bed and early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

Now Prof. Scott, an American authority, is quoted as telling his university class that the best time to study is at night, when the mind is most active, and the effort of concentration entails the least strain. If that be true, and it probably is, we see another old proverb knocked into a cocked hat.

• • •

The experience of newspaper men will certainly bear out the theory that the minds of men are most active at night. Look, for example, at the cases of aldermen, school trustees, post-prandial orators and other inoffensive gentlemen who, in the daytime, would never be accused of being deep thinkers or of having transcendental oratorical powers. The moment the sun goes down all that is changed. The parties in question go to meetings, or banquets, and display a wisdom and gift of language which fairly makes their newspaper auditors gasp, and causes a sometimes uncalled-for consumption of gas. It is all owing, of course, to the cause that Prof. Scott points out, the minds of men are most active at night. Perhaps that is the reason why, in some large cities, the meetings of the various civic bodies are held in the afternoon.

What shall we do to be saved? was the title of one of Robt. Ingersoll's lectures. People of faith and people of no faith flocked to hear it. That is the very latest discovery of the laboratory, and it is the only preparation that claims to, or that will, kill the pestiferous dandruff germ. SIFTON'S SHABBY TRICK.

(Mail and Empire.)

Upon the Christian Guardian, a respected contemporary, Clifford Sifton has certainly played an inexcusable trick. The Guardian said the other day: "Methodism lifts her head once more when one of her sons, a Cabinet Minister, resigns from the seat of power rather than swallow his principles and abet the submission of his leader. Would to God that he might lead every Methodist member of Parliament with him, and inspire every Methodist voter to protest!" And a few days later the son in question swallowed his principles and offered to vote for coercion.

ARE THEY AFRAID TO SEEK RE-ELECTION?

ASPIRANTS FOR INTERIOR PORTFOLIO FEAR PUBLIC OPINION—NONE COULD BE ELECTED.

Ottawa, March 28. — Sir Wilfrid Laurier is said to be uneasy over the situation created by Mr. Sifton's resignation. There is no dearth of willing aspirants for the vacant portfolio, but the trouble is that not one of them who counts for anything dare go back to his constituents for re-election. This is even true of the most favored man for the position, Mr. Walter Scott, West Assiniboia. Mr. Scott recognizes that while, after the lapse of four years, his course in supporting the educational clauses of the Autonomy Bill may be so far forgotten as not to impede his chances of being returned at a general election, he would not have the remotest show of being returned, even with the prestige of a Cabinet position, in the present temper of his constituents. Another matter that is giving the Government trouble is the strong case made out by the leader of the Opposition against the constitutionality of the educational clauses of the bill. Those who are in a position to know what is transpiring on the inside, incline to the belief that the Government will yet decide to refer the bill to the Supreme Court and Imperial Privy Council for a decision as to the constitutionality of the measure.

Wedding Bells.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Elliott was the scene of a very pleasing event on March 22nd, when their only daughter, Annie, was united in matrimony by the Rev. C. L. Thompson to Mr. Richard Townsend, of Holloway. Promptly at seven o'clock, 'mid the strains of "The Arrival of the Bride," played by Miss Daisy Townsend, sister of the groom, the wedding party took their places in the parlor under an evergreen arch, decorated with flowers. The bride's gown was of cream voile, trimmed with chiffon and ribbon, and she wore the bridal veil, entwined with lilies of the valley. Her travelling suit was navy blue etamine and hat to match, while the bridesmaid, Miss Alice Adams, West Huntingdon, cousin of the bride, wore a dress of white organdie over blue. Mr. Clayton Denyes, Bethel, did his part as groomsman. After congratulations the invited guests, numbering about eighty, proceeded to the dining-hall in order as their names were called, which was decorated with mottoes, "Welcome to our Guests," etc., and partook of the good things provided, while the bride's four brothers acted as waiters. The many costly presents showed the good wishes of their many friends. The groom's present to the bride was a coon coat and brooch, to the bridesmaid a gold brooch and to the groomsman a pair of gold cuff links. Next morning the wedding party proceeded to the train, en route for Belleville, and returned in the evening to the home of the groom's father, where a reception was held.—Com.

Why Women Are Weak

To Any Womanly Sufferer, I Offer a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy Free.

Only one woman in 98 has perfect health. And almost all womanly sickness can be traced to a common cause—the nerves are weak. Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.

But the nerves that, unguided and unknown, night and day, keep the heart in motion—control the digestive apparatus—regulate your liver—operate the kidneys—the nerves on which all the vital functions depend.

These are the nerves that worry wears out and work breaks down.

It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver—the rebellious stomach—the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.

My remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve—the power nerve—and builds it up, and strengthens it, and makes it well—and that is the end of womanly weakness.

In more than a million homes my remedy is known. It has cured womanly weakness not once, but repeatedly—over and over again. Yet you may not have heard of it—or hearing, may have delayed or doubted. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send me no money—make me no promise—take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have not tried my remedy I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle—not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. The druggist will require no conditions. He will accept my order as cheerfully as though your dollar laid before him. He will send the bill to me.

Will you accept this opportunity to learn at my expense absolutely, how to be rid forever of all forms of womanly weakness—to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write to-day.

In connection with Dr. Shoop's Restorative, it is sometimes advisable to give local treatment. If so, get Dr. Shoop's Night Cure. Both remedies are on sale at all druggists.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 9 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

HUSBANDS' LOVE LETTERS.

"What d'ye think of Mrs. Sutro's cute little plan of having hubby's love letters printed in a book and passing it around among her friends?" asked the Stenographer.

"I bet that the main guy that ran the inquisition and devised forms of torture, in the good old days of the rack and stake, wore petticoats," replied the Bookkeeper.

"I think it was perfectly lovely," said the Stenographer, "and I have a large-size picture of Mr. Sutro as a dear little cherub with rosy wings, penning hot stuff to his ducky daddie, ootsy, wootsy, tootsy, dearest darling baby, and sending her poems by telegraph at five cents a word, that clogged up the wire with sweetness."

"Well," observed the Bookkeeper gloomily, "I only hope that Mr. Sutro has his nerve with him. He'll need it when he comes to perusing the volume. I can't think of anything that's more calculated to make a man want to go and get lost than to have to read in cold, hard print the gush he gushed in other days.

"I'm not one that believes in raking up the past, anyway, and it doesn't look to me as if Mrs. Sutro was giving her husband a fair deal in hauling out his love letters and spreading them before the public.

"From all I can learn he's been a good husband who has jumped through the hoop and put up the mazuma and never kicked about her belonging to women's clubs, and if he had a weakness for dropping into poetry now and then and slopping over with soft talk, she might have overlooked it and kept it on the quiet."

"It'll make all the other married women, who haven't got any collection of husband's love letters to publish, dead sore," remarked the Stenographer.

"And it'll make all the other married men mighty careful what they write to their wives," declared the Bookkeeper, "the incriminating letters in a breach of promise suit won't be in it with the cheery prospect of having your friends sniggering over your effusions to your wife."

"Maybe it is coming it a little strong to have 'em printed in a book, but a woman is the wise dame who keeps all the love letters that a man writes her," said the Stenographer.

"Why," enquired the Bookkeeper.

"Oh," responded the Stenographer, "they are mighty handy to have around for reference. I knew a woman who used to keep her husband on the jump with a bunch of burning missives that he had written her while they were engaged.

"Every time she had to get up and make the fire of a morning she would draw out a yellow letter and read him paragraphs, in which he swore that if she ever married him her lily white hands should never be called upon to perform any task save soothing his tired brow.

"When he kicked about the bills she tore off a few quotations from another epistle, in which he told her what joy it would be to lay his all at her feet, and when he wanted to stay home of an evening she would go quietly off in a corner and read another lot of flub dub to which he had signed his name, and in which he said that his only object in life was to make her happy."

"Maybe there is more wisdom in publishing your husband's love letters than a mere man would get next to," admitted the Bookkeeper.

"Looks to me like a mighty straight tip," said the Stenographer, "you don't belong to a woman's club for nothing." BELLE BLITZ.

CRAIGMONT.

The snow is rapidly disappearing. It is almost as if a Chinook wind from the west was exercising its power on it. The roads are bad.

A very pleasant evening was spent at Mr. Dennison's on Monday by the young people. Judging from the hour at which the guests dispersed, we conclude that the host must be a good entertainer.

We miss very much the familiar face of Jay Caverly, he having gone west on a prospective tour. Jay began clerking in the store here a little over a year ago, and was rapidly advanced until he held the highest position. Although only very young, he proved himself worthy of the greatest confidence. He is one of the boys we will hear about.

Mrs. Whyte, from Carlow, was visiting her daughters, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Mackay and Mrs. Bandy, on Thursday.

The wood cutters, about forty in number, are laid off for the present. The water in the swamps makes it difficult in getting out the wood.

The saw mill began work last week. All seems favorable for a good spring and summer's work.

GROWTH OF DAIRY INDUSTRY.

PROF. RUDDICK, GIVES INTERESTING FIGURES BEFORE COMMITTEE.

Ottawa, March 28.—Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, gave some interesting figures to the Agricultural Committee this morning on the growth of the dairy industry in Canada. He said the total value of dairy products made in Canada last year was $80,000,000. An example of recent growth was condensed milk. In 1898 we imported $59,101 of that product, whilst last year we exported $150,094 worth. Our hold on the cheese market of Great Britain is strengthening, as Canada now supplies 72 per cent. of the cheese imported there, and of the brand which is our specialty, the Cheddar, we supplied 85 per cent. of their needs. The demand for Canadian dairy products in the West Indies was growing.

Prof. Ruddick suggested that there was possibly an opportunity for our Canadian farmers to commence the manufacture of soft cheese for home consumption.

Replying to questions by members, Mr. Ruddick stated that there can never be any trade in butter between New Zealand or Australia and Canada, with the excessive freight and duty of four cents per pound. The Japanese are commencing to use butter, and there is a prospect of a profitable trade with that country. Canadian butter is also recapturing the market in the Yukon.

Prof. Ruddick believed there was more cheese and butter being produced in Quebec now than in Ontario.

Gymnasium class this week will be on Friday night, instead of Saturday. Dr. Clarke will lead.

On Sunday afternoon the men's meeting will be conducted by the Albert College Gospel Band; a bright inspiring service is looked for. This being the last meeting of the season a good crowd should be present.

Several members of the Board of Directors have expressed their intention of attending the Dominion conference of Y.M.C.A. workers, which will be held in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7.

A BILIOUS HEADACHE

Is one of the meanest things in the world. To prevent biliousness use Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which keep the system clean and pure, regulate the bowels, give tone to kidneys and liver. You'll never have a headache, you'll never have a sour stomach, but you will have vigorous, bracing health by taking Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Your druggist sells Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25 cents per box or five boxes for one dollar.

A Peter Pan Story.

While Mr. Barrie was composing his delightful "Peter Pan" he went to a children's supper party, says The London Chronicle. Among the guests was a little boy whose healthy appetite provoked from his mother the pleading threat: "You will be ill to-night." "No, mother, not till to-morrow," was the calm response of the contented creature of the moment. It caught and pleased the ear of Mr. Barrie, who put it into his play, and promised to the juvenile joint-author a halfpeny royalty upon every performance. In the case of so prosperous a piece, this payment should Peter-pan out to a little fortune for a little boy.

The unspoken word never does harm.—Kossuth.

THE CANADA'S CRUISE.

To Spend a Month or Two in West India Waters.

A special despatch from Halifax, dated Jan. 31, 1905, says: The trim steam cruiser Canada, the pioneer perhaps of a great Canadian navy, will leave to-morrow, and for a month or two she will fly the blue ensign in other than Canadian waters. Since coming to Halifax several improvements have been made on board, and the ship put in really first-class shape. The experience of the officers coming across the ocean demonstrated the desirability of a pilot house on a level with the bridge, and that has been built. Her searchlight has been shifted, steering gear improved, and both a Marconi wireless and a submarine bell signal-receiving apparatus installed on board. Her stores are all on board, and yesterday she coaled. It is expected she will bunker again at Bermuda for the West Indies trip. She will proceed from here to Bermuda, and will go thence to Nassau and Port Royal, Barbadoes, Port of Spain, Trinidad and Turks Island. From there she will return to Nassau and to Bermuda. It is expected the trip will be about 6,700 miles, and will occupy about two months, the cruiser returning here in time to transfer some of her crew to the cruisers of the fishery protection service.

The crew will be trained in gunnery work at sea, with four guns mounted on the ship's deck. The Canada will be conducted on British naval regulations as nearly as possible. Captain Knowlton, commander of the Canada, and Mr. Milne, first officer, both hold gunnery school certificates, and both are experienced officers in the service. Captain Knowlton made a name for himself some years ago by his work in connection with the prevention of fishery poaching in Canadian waters. John S. McKay, formerly of the Acadia, goes as secretary and paymaster, and he also is an experienced officer.

It is regretted that Vice-Admiral Bosanquet was unable to officially attach the Canada to the British fleet, owing to the transition state of his command, but it is probable that the Canada will meet the British ships at one of the West Indian ports, and may take part in some of the fleet evolutions in the capacity of a despatch boat. Of her crew many were recruited from the fishing fleets. The Canada's cruise is attracting much attention, and is expected to afford splendid training for both officers and men.

The Tailor Made Gown.

Women take a lot better care of their evening gowns than those in which they are seen daily. Isn't it strange how many women will wear a tailor made day after day every time they go out, yet never think of having it pressed? Yet a man always has the suit he isn't wearing in the hands of his tailor, being cleaned and pressed. Women's tailor mades are a good deal like men's clothes nowadays—that is, in the cloths of which they are made. They are almost as liable to being kneed or wrinkled, and there's nothing freshens a gown like a good brushing and pressing.

ORIENTAL PEOPLE.

Grace of the Women and Classic Drapery of the Men.

Passing us occasionally, going to Jerusalem with butter and eggs and little jars of leben that showed their thick, creamy throats as they were held up to us, were small companies of women in single file. As one blue procession went by the leader called to us: "Why should you ride and we walk? Why is your lot better than ours?" Given the opportunity for leisurely argument, we could not by any philosophy have made satisfactory answer. We could only admit the fact as they saw it and recognize the universal world plaint of discontent.

They carry themselves, these women, like figures on an antique frieze. As they stride along, holding in sure balance on their heads their jars and baskets of homely produce, they tread the stony paths with the grace and largeness of action that we of the occident have grown to regard as belonging only to the age of Praxiteles.

The men are also admirable in the simplicity of their gestures, the big lines of their attitudes, the swing of their draperies. I saw a youth fling his mantle over his shoulder and fold it about him exactly in the manner of the classic Greek sculptural in his finely unconscious pose. God save the day when these sons of Canaan clothe their limbs in our ungainly garments!

OPEN AIR TREATMENT.

Reasons For Its Good Results In Cases of Consumption.

The advantages of the open air treatment for consumptives may be thus briefly summarized: The patient exposed continuously to fresh air gains in appetite, assimilates his food better, sleeps more soundly and awakens more refreshed. Free exposure to air is the best antipyretic. Sweating at night, formerly so common a symptom, usually ceases. Colds are practically unknown among patients leading an open air life. Secondary infection, on account of the comparative freedom of the air from micro organisms, is much less likely to occur. Tolerance of outside air is very quickly established, and no one who has tried the open air life will willingly go back to the former conditions of stuffiness. I have never seen any one made worse by exposure to fresh air. Even during a thick London fog patients get on better lying in bed on a balcony or in rooms with windows wide open and a good fire burning than when attempts are made to shut out the fog by keeping the windows shut.—Dr. H. W. G. Mackenzie in London Lancet.

RELIGIOUS TATTOOING.

A Custom That Is In Vogue In One Part of Italy.

In the "vanity" section of a museum at Florence there is an interesting collection of blocks used for what is called "religious tattooing" among Italian peasants of the district inclosed between the Abruzzi, Umbria and the Adriatic.

Peasants in these parts at work with shirt sleeves rolled up display a Christian symbol of some sort or a text tattooed in blue ink on their brown skin. This has been imprinted on the occasion of some special festival.

A wooden block is pressed upon the tightly drawn skin to mark the outlines of the design. This is then punctured, and a blue ink is rubbed into the wounds, which usually heal in about twenty-four hours. The custom, which is essentially Christian, is in commemoration of the branding of St. Francis, who founded a monastery close to Loretto.—London Telegraph.

The Gentleman.

"The true gentleman," said Cardinal Newman, "carefully avoids whatever may cause a jar or jolt in the minds of those with whom he is cast—all clashing of opinion, all collision of feeling—his great concern being to make every one at his ease and at home. He guards against unreasonable allusions or topics which may irritate. He never speaks of himself except when compelled, never defends himself by a mere retort. He is scrupulous in imputing motives to those who interfere with him and interprets everything for the best. He is never mean or little in his disputes, never takes an unfair advantage, never mistakes personalities or sharp sayings for arguments."

Their Only Chance.

A party of soldiers was taken to the shooting range for the first time.

The men first fired at a target 500 yards away, and not one hit it. They were next tried at a target 200 yards away, and still every one missed. They were at last tried at one just 100 yards away, but no one hit it.

"Attention!" thundered the drill sergeant. "Fix bayonets! Charge! It's your only chance!"

Need Never Reproach Himself.

"What word did her father send after he had found out about your elopement?"

"Oh, he wrote me a very kind letter, saying he was glad we'd taken that course, as it relieved him of the necessity of giving his consent and having it on his mind all the rest of h' life."

Perhaps it is unnecessary to worry over the possibility of our City Council belittling themselves by asking Andy Carnegie for a library. At that rate a $20,000 library building would bind the Council to spend $4,000 per year upon it. They'd be breaking their necks to do that, I don't think.

THE GIRL WHO GIGGLES.

(The Khan.)

Give me a club that I may kill
The tenor pert, the smirking basso;
Hand me an axe that I may spill
The blood of each upstart jackass, O
Ah, when the preacher's touching tones
Have set my guilty soul on fire,
The flames are quenched forever by
The girl who giggles in the choir.

The basso smirks, the tenor grins,
The alto smiles behind her muff,
And I, with all my load of sins,—
And seeking mercy, think it rough
I can't enjoy sweet Heaven's dawn,
Or feel the blast of Hades' fire,
Because my eye is fixed upon
The girl who giggles in the choir.

I think I'll rise in all my might
And pass around a strong petition;
I do it cuz I think it's right
To save your souls from sure perdition;
We've got to kill the tenor brave
And make the basso man retire
And bury in the same cold grave
The girl who giggles in the choir.

HIS LIFE CRUSHED OUT

Body of A. W. Murton Found Off G.T.R. Tracks in Toronto.

Life Was Extinct, and It Is Surmised That He Fell Off One Train and Was Struck by Another Later and Killed—Was One of the Best Known and Popular Insurance Men in Canada.

Toronto, March 29.—Dead and mangled, the body of Arthur W. Murton, 120 Isabella street, was found early yesterday morning lying a few feet from the railroad tracks, near the entrance to High Park.

By what means the fatality occurred is not known, but the theory is that he fell off a train bound for Hamilton on Monday night, after falling he became unconscious and laid on the track, and that another train struck and killed him. On Monday deceased notified his family he was going to Hamilton on the 10.30 p. m. train.

The late Mr. Murton was one of the best known and popular insurance men in Canada. He had been connected with the Canada Life Assurance Co. for nearly twenty years, and only severed his connection with the company a few days ago. Before coming to Toronto he was manager of the Ontario Bank in Newmarket. He was born in Guelph 50 years ago. He leaves a widow, son and daughter.

Coroner Orr will hold an inquest this morning at 10 o'clock at No. 2 police station.

Result of Love Affair.

Hamilton, March 29.—The body of Miss Edith Jenkins, the 18-year-old daughter of G. Parry Jenkins, F. R. A. S., 35 South Macnab street, was found in a barn near Port Nelson yesterday. Beside her was a bottle that had contained carbolic acid. It is said that the unfortunate girl was infatuated with a man well known in the city several years her senior, and things did not run smoothly. In addition to that, she did not enjoy good health, and had lately expressed a wish to die. She disappeared Monday afternoon, rode to Burlington and tramped about three miles to the barn where she ended her life. Coroner Watson, Burlington, held an inquest last evening.

Suffocated in Own Home.

Winnipeg, March 29.—John Thompson, a C. P. R. machinist, aged 64, was suffocated at his home, Pacific avenue, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Thompson attempted to start a fire with coal oil. There was an explosion and the house took fire. Thompson was asleep upstairs and was dead when found. The woman was taken to the general hospital badly burned and will probably die.

Was Struck by a Train.

Buffalo, March 29.—John Zeiter, 35 years old, who lives near Stevensville, Ont., was found unconscious in a pool of blood near the Michigan Central tracks at Bridgeburg, Ont., yesterday. His skull was crushed and his body bruised. It is thought he was struck by a train. He is in a serious condition in the General Hospital, Buffalo.

Two Rescued by One.

Peterboro, March 29.—Stanley Lewis and Edward Murty, two boys, fell into White's Creek and were carried over a dam. They were rescued by a young Italian named Dominico Memma, who plunged into the stream at the risk of his life. He will be recommended for a Humane Society medal.

TRAINS COLLIDE ON BRIDGE.

Three Cars Drop Into Street and Two Persons Are Injured.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., March 29.—A Michigan Central and a Pere Marquette train came together in a head-on collision on the American end of the Cantilever Bridge early yesterday. Three cars were derailed and pitched over into the street below, a distance of 30 feet, carrying with them a switchman's shanty, in which was seated Patrick Whalen, a switchtender, who was badly cut and bruised and received severe internal injuries. George Kehmle, of Niagara Falls, (Ont.), conductor of the Pere Marquette train, was also badly cut and bruised and injured internally.

Five Men Drowned.

St. Joseph, Mo., March 29.—Five men have been drowned in the Missouri River here. The dead: Wm. Lewis, Oscar Lewis, Harry Talent, Harry Smith and Howard Hutcheson. The men were engaged in dyke building operations on the Kansas side of the river, opposite the water pumping station.

FUNERAL AT BARRIE.

Andrew Miscampbell Laid at Rest There Tuesday Afternoon.

Barrie, March 29.—Many people assembled from Barrie and different parts of the County of Simcoe yesterday to attend the funeral of the late Andrew Miscampbell, Conservative organizer and ex-member of the Legislature. After the arrival of the 11.30 train from Toronto, a short service was conducted in the Presbyterion Church by Rev. Dr. McLeod, of Barrie, assisted by Rev. P. M. Macdonald, of Toronto, both of whom delivered brief addresses. Among the members of the Ontario Cabinet and Legislature present were: Hon. Dr. Pyne, Hon. Dr. Willoughby, Hon. N. Monteith, John Gaina, Thomas Crawford, W. R. Smyth, E. A. Little, J. S. Duff, A. B. Thompson. Other prominent Conservatives in attendance were: A. W. Wright, Toronto; W. J. Parkhill, Midland, and J. Khan's Palace Besieged.

Askhabad, Caucasus, March 29.—Refugees from Kuchan, Persia, report that the Palace of the Khan is besieged by an armed mob. The popular resentment against him is intense in consequence of allegation that he has been exploiting the people. The refugees charge that Mohammedans from Baku are responsible for exciting the population against the Christians.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet." Etc.

she lifted to his, and her hand—did it clasp the paper he had seen?—went to her heart.

He took a step towards her.

"Decima!" he breathed. "Decima! Ah, what is it? What is the matter? You—you are unhappy, troubled about something! Forgive me! I did not know it was you, did not know you were there. I saw the light and came to find out if there was anything wrong. What is it, Decima? You will tell me, will you not? I've no right to ask—and yet I have. For I love you, Decima! No sorrow, no trouble can touch you that does not reach me also! All my thoughts, all my life, are bound up in you! I've no thought, no care, but for you! Ah, don't look at me so! What—what—have I said, what have I done? Have pity on me, Decima dear—"

He had drawn nearer to her, half unconsciously, but she shrank back from him with something, as it seemed to him, like terror and horror in her eyes and on her quivering lips.

"No! No!" she breathed with a shudder, as if a cold wind had passed over her. "Don't—don't say it! I—I never knew, guessed—"

"Not even guessed! Oh, Decima!" he whispered, reproachfully.

"No!" she responded, passionately. "Never! I—did not know. You must not say another word! You will not? Oh, how unhappy, how wretched I am! And I thought to—to make you happy—"

"You have, you have, Decima!" he pleaded, for her grief, her self-reproach, were almost unendurable. "I had never known happiness until I had known you, until that night I saw you—"

"Hush!" she whispered, almost moaned. "You—you don't know what you are saying, what—what I am!"

As she spoke she thrust the paper and the ring she had held in her clenched hand into her bosom.

"Don't say another word. Let us—let us try and think you have not spoken. For Vivienne's sake I will forget it, I will, indeed! And you must, you must, you must!"

He put out his hand to stay her, and tried to stammer out a remonstrance, an appeal, but she shrank back, and murmuring:

"No, no! Let us forget it. You don't know—don't know!" passed him and glided toward the hut where she had left Vivienne sleeping.

And on a similar night, some months earlier, Vane strode up and down the terrace at Lesborough and looked into the mist that hid his lawns and park. It hid the familiar view from him, but it opened and let him gaze, with longing despair, at the Fairy Isle, that rarely left his memory.

One of the drawing-room windows was open, and Judith's voice floated out to him. In a pause the sound of voices and laughter followed. The scent of cigarettes came from the smoking-room, the lights from the windows of the great house fell garishly athwart the terrace.

It all jarred and weighed upon him. The man was infinitely weary of it all; for Fate had robbed him of the one woman who could have made life worth living, and the rank, the wealth, that were his, tasted as bitter as Dead Sea fruit upon his lips.

"My God; who would have thought it would have been so difficult to forget!" he muttered to himself as he bit at the unlit cigar between his teeth. "How much longer, I wonder, can I endure this life? And what a fool I am to bear it a moment longer. Why don't I go?"

He smiled in grim mockery at the question. He was the Earl of Lesborough, "lord of half a county," with all the "responsibilities and duties" of his lofty position. Rank, wealth, the power which belongs by right to men in his position, wound round him like the chains of a galley slave, and cut into his aching, unsatisfied heart.

"If by some means, any way, any how, I could get away from it all forever!" he mused, with a gesture of utter weariness.

He need not have worried himself over the hopelessness of the idea, for at that moment Julian, as he sat brooding in the Witch's Room, was evolving a simple little plan which would make the gratification of Vane's desire quite easy.

CHAPTER XX.

It was the last night of the house party at Lesborough. Some of the guests had already gone, but, amongst others, the Letchfords and the Ormes still remained, the Letchfords because Vane was fond of them and had pressed them to stay until the last minute, and the Ormes because he was anxious that Julian should have every chance of paying his suit to Judith.

"Take it bye and large, Blanche, we had a very good time," said Sir Charles in that hour before dinner which he always claimed for a confidential chat with his wife. "But of course I should always be all right anywhere with Vane."

"Y-es," she said, as she lay back in her chair before the fire, warming herself in her dressing-gown. "Y-es. It is to be wished that Lord Lesborough could reciprocate and be 'all right' in your company."

"You think he isn't happy, that there's still something on his mind, Blanche? How you stick to that idea of yours! Do you remember how it seized upon you the night we found him?"

She nodded thoughtfully. "Yes, the trouble is still there, whatever it was and is," she said. "No one could have played the part of host better than he has done; but he has been playing, acting, all the time. He has been bored—no, that's not the word, wearied—to death every day and every hour; and much as he likes some of us—you especially, Charlie—he will not be sorry, I think, when he sees the last of us. Where is he going; do you know?"

Sir Charles shook his head. "I don't know. I don't think he knows himself. I asked him this morning what his plans were, and he shrugged his shoulders and smiled—you know that smile of his—as if he did not care, and it did not matter."

There was silence for a moment or two, then Letchford said:

"Is Judith engaged to Julian Shore, Blanche?"

She did not reply for awhile, then she replied:

"I don't know. Sometimes I think she is, at others I doubt it; but I fancy there is some kind of understanding between them. He has looked—well, as a man looks who at least has some reason for hope."

"He looks jolly bad at most times," grunted Letchford. "There's a pinched look about his face, his eyes shine too much, and he seems to be in a kind of dream half his time."

"I know. And Judith has the same look about her mouth and in her eyes. Charlie, there is something mysterious about those two. They seem to be—to be watching each other, as if they were waiting for something to happen."

Letchford burst into a laugh. "'Pon my word, Blanche, you talk like a shilling novel! Why on earth should they watch each other, and what can happen? I say, would you mind if I asked Vane to come South with us?"

"Not in the least. I have grown to like him. But he won't come, Charlie. As I said, he will be glad to be rid of us, for he wants to be alone to brood over this unknown trouble of his. But ask him, by all means."

"I'll have to ask Julian Shore as well."

Lady Blanche raised her brows and made a little grimace.

"I suppose so; well, I don't like Mr. Shore—but it does not matter. Lord Lesborough will not come, and Mr. Shore would not accept without him. I have no fear. You'd better begin to dress, Charlie. I can hear that most of them have gone to their rooms, and you always take such a frightful time. I'm sure I don't know why; you only put on the same things every night, and ought to be able to do so blindfolded."

As Lady Letchford had said, most of the people had gone to their rooms; but one or two still lingered in the half light in the drawing-room and conservatory; and Judith stood in the latter listening moodily to the steady tramp of some one pacing the terrace outside. It was Vane, and though she could not see him, her eyes, as they followed his movements as he passed to and fro, dilated and contracted in unison with the beating of her heart. The love she had borne him, even when she had deserted him, had changed into hate; but through the circle of that hatred, the memory, the sting, of that old love penetrated; and the sight of him, the sound of his voice, his footsteps, still had power to move her.

She was turning away to go to her room when she heard another step, a softer one than that outside, and, turning her head, saw Julian enter the conservatory. Now, strange as it may seem, these two had not been alone together since the night she had enacted with him the melodramatic scene below the terrace. It had not been necessary for her to shun him, for he had not sought a tete-a-tete. Not by word or sign had either of them referred to the incidents, the speech, of that night. But Judith had, when Vane was present, been more civil, indeed, sweetly pleasant to the cousin for whom he had pleaded; so amiable, in fact, that Vane assured himself that his words had borne fruit and that all would be well between Julian and her.

She took up the book which lay on the marble table before her and, without a word, would have passed out, but Julian extended his hand slightly to stay her.

"This is the last night," he said in a low voice and with a glance towards the terrace on which Vane's steps still sounded.

"Yes," she said in a casual way. "It has been a pleasant time, and my father and I have enjoyed it very much. We are going South—to Nice, first, I think."

"Do not," he said; that was all. "Wait until—a few days."

She opened her sapphire eyes upon him with haughty surprise, but they flickered and fell under the steady regard of his sombre ones.

"Why should we wait?" she asked. "I think we are going straight through London; in fact, I know we are."

His lips drew together, and his lids fell over his eyes for a moment.

"Can nothing I can say dissuade you?" he asked in a still lower voice. "Do you think that I can bear to part with you for—how many months? Have you forgotten what passed between us—there?" He pointed to the terrace.

She laughed with an affectation of contemptuous amusement.

"I don't care for the best of melodramas, Mr. Shore; and I am not likely to remember them," she said.

"And yet you do remember," he said, quietly. "There is no moment when you do not remember it, even as I do. And our compact dwells with me night and day, is burned into my very soul."

She moved her queenly head impatiently, and tried to laugh.

"Then I wish you would forget it, please," she said, "or cut it out of your 'very soul.' It was a piece of madness, the madness of a moment, the moment of a woman's weakness, of which you availed yourself most fully, Mr. Shore. It was never more than that, it could not possibly be more. If I were not able to laugh at it, I should be ashamed of it."

"We agreed," he said, as if she had not spoken, "that if I were master here you would be my wife. You taunted me with the impossibility of the pact, but you swore, with the kiss which is a woman's oath, that you would keep it."

"It was a safe promise—a promise in which there was little danger of fulfilment as if I had promised to be Queen of England when you were King. There is the master of Lesborough"—she raised her hand towards the sound of Vane's steps on the terrace—"and you are still, and will be but the dependent."

"And the heir," he said as quietly as before. "You forget that. If anything should happen to still those steps forever, I shall claim the fulfilment of your promise, your oath, Judith."

His face was no paler than usual; indeed, a spot of color had come into the sallow cheeks, but Judith Orme fought with the shudder that ran through her and tried in vain to meet the steady regard of the black eyes with a contemptuous smile.

"You cling to melodrama," she said, with a shrug of her shoulders.

"Will you wait in England for a week?" he asked, as if her taunt had not touched him.

"No!" she replied.

"Three days—two?" he said, slowly, patiently.

"Not one!" was the instant response. "Will you let me pass, please? I shall be late."

He stood aside, but as she was sweeping by him he caught her hand and pressed it to his lips.

"For all your gibes and mockery, I know your heart," he whispered. "I can trust you. Hate is stronger than love, and I am sure of my reward. You will keep your word!"

She looked strangely at him over her shoulder, paused as if she were listening to the footsteps outside, then, with a flash of the sapphire eyes as if a latent fire had suddenly sprung up within them, said, in a voice almost as low as his:

"Yes, though I do not know whether I hate him or you worse, I will keep my word."

When she had gone Julian stood for a moment looking before him, his tongue moistening his hot lips. She had spoken of madness, and he knew that it was the right word to describe the passion which consumed him, the compact he had made with her. But there is a grim method in some kind of madness.

He went out by a door at the end of the conservatory and, making his way through the ladies' garden, entered the laboratory and sank into a chair.

"She will go," he muttered. "And it is only the sight of her that gives me courage. When she has gone I shall be as weak as water. It is her presence, the sound of her voice, that drives the fear out of my heart and fills my veins with fire. No, I can't wait! I can't wait! It must be to-night or never!"

As he spoke his face grew livid with some emotion, with the ecstacy of fear battling with the frenzy of desire. The door opened slowly, and before he could drive the terrible expression from his face, Deborah entered with her noiseless step. He started to his feet and went to the table, while a thought flashed through his brain. The woman watched him too closely, knew too much of him; she was better out of the way. He turned again slowly, and with a smile signed to her.

"Is your box packed, Deborah?"

"No," she replied, with downcast eyes.

"Then pack it," he said. "I want you to go up to-night instead of to-morrow. It will be more convenient. You don't mind the short notice? A carriage shall take you to the station. There is a train at eight-thirty. It will give you time?"

She raised her eyes and looked at him with a keen but veiled anxiety, an anxiety bordering on dread.

"Don't send me, Mr. Julian!" she said, her thin fingers moving swiftly. "Let me stay to-night, till you go!"

He looked at her with a frown of surprise that was not altogether assumed.

"What do you mean? What is the matter with you, Deborah?" he asked. "Why should you object to leave here a few hours earlier than you intended?"

Her speechless lips worked and her eyes sought the floor as if they were afraid to meet his.

"Let me stay, Mr. Julian!" she pleaded. "You are not well—you do not sleep. I watch—I can see the light under your door. There—there is something on your mind, something—" Her fingers ceased and her hands gripped each other as if she had said too much.

Julian laughed noiselessly.

"Really, I don't know what can be the matter with you, Deborah!" he said, with an impatient gesture; but her strange reluctance to leave him only made him more determined that she should go. "If you said that you were not well it would be more to the purpose; in fact, I've noticed that you've not been looking the thing lately. This place does not suit you. Now, don't argue any longer, my good Deborah. I want the London rooms put straight by the time I get up there to-morrow—for I leave here to-morrow—and I intend you shall go to-night."

She made a gesture of resignation—it was almost Oriental in its emphasis—and busied about the room putting a thing here and there in its place. Presently she touched him on the shoulder nervously and pointed to the cords of the ventilator.

"They are nearly broken," she said.

Julian glanced up and then turned away.

"I know! I know!" he said, impatiently. "It does not matter; they will last. Let them alone, please!"

She moved towards the door, but paused and looked at him with a mixture of affection, entreaty and despair; then she raised her hands and said on them, slowly, as one reluctantly preferring a claim, recalling an obligation:

"Mr. Julian, I—I served your father faithfully. I have served you, for love of him and yourself. I—I nursed you. I'd have laid down my life for him. I'd lay it down for you, Mr. Julian—"

He nodded, as if he were schooling himself to be patient with her.

"I am not like other women. I am deaf and dumb, but when any trouble has threatened you or him I have known it, known it though no word has been spoken, no sign, that others could read, has been made. There—there is trouble threatening now." She shuddered. "I know—who should know better?—when there is something on your mind, and there is something dark and dreadful on it now! Mr. Julian—ah, for God's sake don't do it! She's not worth it! She's beautiful—oh, I know, I know; but she's not worth it!"

Julian's face went white and into his eyes crept the reflection of the nameless terror and dread which shone glassily in hers; then he laughed, a laugh that sounded forced and ghastly in the face of the woman's terror, and, taking out his purse, he held out some money.

"Here's your fare, Deborah," he said, gently enough, but his lips, though they smiled, declared his inflexible determination.

As she took the money she clung to his hand and slid to her knees, her livid face turned up to him imploringly.

"Master, I see more than most, feel more than those who can speak and hear," she signed. "I am afraid! I know that look! Your mother's face used to wear it—I am afraid! Ah, let me stay!"

He raised her, and with his hand on her shoulder led her to the door.

"Foolish Deborah!" he signed as he opened it. "You are nervous and out of sorts, full of wild fancies and presentiments. I'll send you to a doctor when I come home."

She protested, pleaded no longer, but, with a look at him, the look of a dog which, indifferent to all the world besides is faithful and loving to its master, bent her head resignedly and went out.

Julian stood frowning for a moment or two, gnawing at his lip as if he were asking himself how much she guessed, or whether it was only an exhibition of nerves; then, with a gesture, the Spanish gesture which wipes away a distasteful subject, went up to dress.

The dinner that night was a very bright one. Judith, in a wonderful dress which set off her marvellous beauty to perfection, talked almost unceasingly, her eyes shining like stars, her lips, usually so immobile, curved with the smile which women wear when they are happiest—or wish you to think them so. Vane, with his grave regard, looked from her to Julian and wondered whether they had at last—on this last opportunity—become betrothed; but he could glean nothing from Julian's face. Serene and unclouded, it told nothing.

Lady Fanworthy, at the head of the table, watched and listened with the faint smile in her keen eyes. The Letchfords almost flirted openly with each other; Sir Chandos ate—and drank—steadily, showing his teeth when a witty remark was made, and stroking the carefully dyed moustache as he glanced covertly at that vision of loveliness, his daughter, to Julian and Vane, who, as the dinner proceeded, leaned back and dropped out of the discussion of plans for the winter.

Even at the most public moments he had this habit of "dropping out," and away soared his thoughts, and his spirit, to a certain nameless isle, where moved the slim, graceful figure of the girl he had loved—and lost. The voices round the dinner table smote vaguely on his ear, for he was listening to that clear, girlish voice which haunted him, sleeping or waking.

"Oh, my lost love! I held you in my arms but once. And then lost you!"

He awakened with a sigh and passed the port to Sir Chandos. The ladies had gone to the drawing-room, and when Sir Chandos had drank his usual, too liberal, allowance, Vance rose.

"Come and sing to us, Julian," he said; "no mournful ditty to-night, but something that will cheer us." And he put his hand on Julian's slight shoulder.

Julian smiled at him, as Jonathan might have smiled at David, and, when he had finished his coffee, went to the piano. He did not ask Judith to play for him that night, and he sang the "Yeoman's Wedding Song" with a verve and swing which seemed to set every piece of china on the Chippendale cabinets ringing.

"Bravo!" said Vane. "Splendid, isn't it?" he demanded of Lady Fanworthy.

"Splendid," she answered duly, with a glance at the handsome face of the singer, now thrown back with parted lips and flashing eyes. "Do you take him with you where you go? By the way, where do you go?"

"I don't know," he said. "I shall stay here for a few days; a week, perhaps. Oh, yes; Julian will go with me, I've no doubt."

"My poor Vane!" she murmured; but he did not hear her.

Bridge was started, but Vane did not play. The Fairy Isle was haunting him presently that night and he could not settle down. He lit a cigar and paced up and down the terrace. Later on the bridge players ceased, and, after the usual wrangling review of the game, went up to bed. Vane, looking in at the drawing-room door, saw Julian and Judith standing by the fire. They were apparently engaged in the usual commonplaces which are uttered before parting for the night, and he did not see the sombre fire that glowed in Julian's eyes as he murmured:

"You will not wait?"

"No," she said.

"But you will keep your promise?"

"Yes," she answered in the same tone.

Nothing more. So are most of the tragedies of life preluded. He opened the door for her and she passed out and he went on to the terrace, meeting Vane face to face.

"Julian!" said Vane. "Is—is it all right? Have you asked her? Oh, I know your secret, my dear fellow!"

Julian hesitated for a moment, then he said:

"Yes, I have asked her. And it is 'yes.'"

"I congratulate you with all my heart!" said Vane. "Love—well, love is the one thing Judith wanted. And she has got that, I know. Splendid! I'm glad! Where are you going?"

"To my den," said Julian. His lips were dry, and he thought his voice was hoarse; but it was not. Vane saw nothing but the lover's dreaminess and embarrassment.

"I'll come to you—let me finish this cigar in the open air. I want to talk over our plans," he said.

CHAPTER XXI.

Julian nodded and went to the laboratory. He looked round the room that, notwithstanding its luxurious appointments, was still suggestive of mystery, and, gliding to the wall on which the ropes of the curious ventilator were hung, nearly severed the already frayed strands. Then he closed the door that led to the ladies' garden and drew the portiere curtain over it. The spirit furnace was in its place, but unlit, and he lighted it and placed beside it, but not upon it, an iron pot containing a bluish liquid. Then he lit a cigarette and, opening a book, sat at the table as if reading; but the printed lines danced before his eyes and he did not turn a page.

Presently there came a knock at the door, Vane's quick, sharp knock, and he entered. He had exchanged his dress coat for an old smoking jacket, a thick, comfortable jacket, with heavy brass buttons.

"No stink on to-night, Julian," he said, pleasantly. "Now, about our plans, old man." He took out his pipe and filled and lit it. "What do you say to Monte Carlo and then, when we are bored of it, Egypt? Or would you rather stay on here and go in for hunting and the rest of it? You have only to say. I don't care. It's all one to me. But I ought to mention that Judith is going South."

Julian nodded. "I know. I want to tell you all about it, Vane," he said, hesitatingly.

Vane laughed. "You need not. Man, do you think I haven't eyes! Of course I've seen how it is with you! And, by George, I'm not surprised! There isn't a more beautiful woman in the world, or one better worth the winning. Julian, did I ever tell you—" He paused and puffed at his pipe.

"That you were once in love with her yourself?" said Julian, placidly enough; but his lips twitched as they smiled.

Vane nodded. "I wondered whether she'd tell you," he said, simply. "I'm glad if she has. It wasn't to be. No matter. I can still wish you luck, old chap. What are you going to do."

Julian had got up and, as if mechanically, had put the iron pot on the spirit furnace.

"An experiment," he said, in a casual kind of way. "I'm trying for this new color. I've got it in my head. You don't mind, do you?"

"No; not if you don't make too much of a froust," said Vane. "Well, what do you say to my plans? We could join the Ormes at Monte Carlo— Phew, that stuff's beginning to smell already!"

"It will be over in a minute," said Julian. "You leave it to me, as usual! You don't seem to care, Vane!"

"That's just it," said Vane. "I don't care. It's all one to me where I am. Few places or things hold any charm for me."

Julian looked at him with a strange mixture of curiosity and aloofness, as if his mind were preoccupied. Then he turned to the furnace again.

"Bother!" he said. "I shall have to get more spirit. Do you mind?" He looked over his shoulder at Vane, and the bluish flames cast a ghastly light on his pale face—"do you mind stirring this stuff while I'm gone? I sha'n't be more than a minute or two. I keep it outside—"

Vane got up from his chair and shrugged his shoulders good-humoredly. "All right; but I hope I sha'n't spoil it; I'm not used to this game."

"Oh, no," responded Julian, casually. "Just keep it stirred."

As he opened the door he glanced over his shoulder again at Vane; and surely if Vane had seen the expression in the black eyes shining forth from the dark shadows surrounding them, he would have felt some presentiment of coming ill; but all his attention was fixed on the task he had undertaken.

Julian's glance lasted but a moment, and he went out and closed the door softly behind him. He did not turn the key, for the door locked by a spring, as did that which led to the ladies' garden, and to both doors only he and Deborah had keys. Outside the door he paused a moment, biting his lips and driving the tell-tale expression from his eyes, then he went slowly, and humming the air he had sung a little while ago, into the hall. Prance, the butler, was standing there and Julian went up to him.

"Oh, Prance," he said, "I've run out of methylated spirits; do you think you could get me some?"

"Yes, Mr. Julian, I generally keep some by me in my pantry. Shall I bring it to your room?"

"Oh, don't trouble; I'll wait here, thanks," said Julian. He sang rather more loudly as Letchford came down the stairs.

"Seen Vane?" he asked. "If he hasn't gone to bed I want him to come and have a pipe. I can't sleep, somehow," he laughed shamefacedly. "Usually drop off as soon as my head's on the pillow."

"Vane's in my den—writing letters. We were making our plans for abroad. I'll tell him when I go back."

"Oh, don't bother him if he's writing," said Letchford, and he went on to the smoking-room.

Prance came back with the spirit-can in his hand.

"Very sorry, Mr. Julian," he said, "but I've run out. Some of the maids must have been at it for their curling tongs. I daresay I could get some from one of them."

Julian thought swiftly. "Ah, yes," he said. "I wish you would. I want it particularly. Send up to Miss Orme's maid and ask her."

"I'll go myself, sir," said Prance, and he went up the stairs.

Julian, still humming, went to the smoking-room and looked in. Letchford was walking up and down, smoking vigorously and rumpling his short hair, a trick he had when he was worried or puzzled.

"Come in and sit down," he said to Julian. "I've got what my wife calls a fidgety fit on me to-night; kind of a—a—what do you call it, presentiment."

Julian smiled. "That ragout was very rich," he said. "I think that chef always overdoes the butter. I'll come and have a cigarette presently; but I must go back to the den first. I'll bring Vane with me."

"Do!" said Letchford, with undue earnestness.

Julian nodded and sauntered back to the hall. As he did so a tall figure in a tea-gown glided down the stairs. It was Judith. He stopped short and their eyes met. In hers was a covert fear, a dread questioning and doubt; in his the gleam of a deadly determination.

"You sent for some spirit?" she said in a low voice.

The expression of his face changed to one of passionate admiration, and his eyes roamed over the beautiful face and tall, light figure.

"Yes," he said, in an ordinary tone. "But I am sorry if I disturbed you, your maid—"

"My maid is getting it," she said. "Where—where is Vane?"

His lids dropped. She, too, was asking for Vane. Did she suspect anything? No matter if she did. At that moment he felt that he would like her to have known, would wish that she should share his guilt.

"In my den," he replied steadily. He looked at his watch as he spoke, and his lips moved as if he were making a calculation.

"In your den—what is he doing there?" she asked.

Julian smiled with an affectation of surprise. "He is writing; we are talking over our programme, and have decided to join you either at Monte Carlo or Cairo."

She drew a breath of relief, but said nothing. Prance came down the stairs with the can in his hand, and, with a murmured "good-night," she went up.

"I've been able to get a little for you, Mr. Julian," said Prance.

Julian thanked him, and, taking up his song again, went slowly toward the Witch's Room.

Vane had drawn a chair up to the spirit furnace and he leant over the pot stirring it mechanically. Yes; he was decidedly de trop; if he were out of the way, Julian and Judith would reign at Lesborough now in the heyday of their youth; with their capacity for enjoyment still at its height; while he— He sighed listlessly; then the sigh was followed by a cough, for the fumes were beginning to rise from the pot and had got into his lungs.

"Phew!" he muttered. "Hope nothing's going wrong with the beastly stuff; Julian will be disappointed. Am I stirring it enough?" The fumes grew thicker, so that he felt some difficulty in breathing. Gradually the difficulty increased and, half choking, he looked round the room.

"Ventilator closed, of course," he said to himself. "These scientific chaps seem to be able to breathe without air; it's use, I suppose. I must open that thing."

He rose, and to his amazement felt his legs weaken under him. His breath was coming in gasps, the room was filling with the fumes. Staggering and holding by the table and the chair, he made his way to the wall where the rope hung and pulled it with a jerk. It broke, and the lower part fell over his arms. He was half blinded and nearly suffocated by this time, and he made for the door with his hands outstretched like a blind man. In the confusion of his mind caused by the deathly sensation of asphyxiation he missed the door and groped with his hands along the panelled wall. At last, as his sight and his breath were utterly failing, he touched the portiere curtain; but he could only cling to it. It came down with his weight, and he fell to the ground, still gripping it.

There is a moment, the millionth part of a moment, before the hand of death crushes out all power of thought, when the past moves like a flash before the mental vision; and in that moment Vane saw and heard Nina as plainly as if she had been in the room with him. His lips formed her name and, half fighting, half resigning himself to the end, he

THE FINANCIAL EXPERT.

Hon. Mr. Hanna Answers Categorically the Questions Asked by Mr. Smith of Sault Ste. Marie.

Toronto, March 29.—In the Legislature yesterday, the Provincial Secretary, Hon. Mr. Hanna, gave his answer to the following questions asked by Mr. Smith, of Sault Ste. Marie:—

Has any financial expert, or auditor, not a resident of Canada, been recently appointed by the Provincial Secretary, temporarily, or otherwise, for any purpose? What is his name? Where does he reside? With what firm is he connected and in what capacity.

L. E. Thorne Engaged.

Mr. Hanna said: The services of L. E. Thorne have been engaged for a temporary period of special work for which he is especially qualified. It includes a report on the various industries carried on at the Central Prison, and the instalment of a system of accounting by the various institutions. The Provincial Secretary's department, whereby the ministers in charge will have a comparative monthly statement covering the work of the department, and the cost thereof, classified under the various heads of expenditure.

Who Mr. Thorne Is.

He resides at the City of Port Huron, and is auditor of the Port Huron Engine and Thresher Co., the Canadian and Port Huron and the Engine and Threshing Co., Winnipeg, and other companies associated with them in the manufacture and sale of agricultural implements and threshing machinery. The system that is being installed can readily be carried on by the present staff.

Mr. Hanna added, "for the comfort of some newspapers," that Mr. Thorne was not connected, nor had he ever been connected, with the Standard Oil Co.

Hon. Mr. Hanna replied to Mr. Harcourt that it was the intention of the Government to introduce some "minor amendments to the act respecting the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors.

Debate on the Address.

T. H. Preston, of Brant, resumed the debate on the address and spoke for an hour. He was followed by Dr. Smellie, of Fort William and C. N. Smith moved the adjournment of the debate.

Want Free Land.

A deputation from Widdifield, Nipissing District, asked Hon. J. J. Foy yesterday that the land of that township be handed out by free grants, instead of at 50 cents per acre, as formerly. This method, they thought, would stimulate immigration. The usual promise of consideration was given.

Liberal Caucus.

The members who compose the Liberal "corner" of the House will hold their caucus this morning. It is expected that Charles M. Bowman will be chosen again as Liberal whip. He arrived for the session yesterday morning. Plans for the session will also be discussed.

About 25 milch cows and springers sold at $25 to $45 each.

The demand for veal calves of good quality is as great as ever, and prices are firm at $3.50 per cwt for inferior to $5.50 for medium, and $6 to $6.25 per cwt for good.

OUR OUTWARD SEEMING

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENT SAYS THE CANADIAN IS AN AMERICAN.

This Is Gall and Wormwood to Englishmen Visiting Canada—Canadians, With All Sincerity, Deny the Soft Impeachment—Good Enough to Say, However, That Despite Yankeeisms the Canadian Is a Good Fellow.

The excellent series of Canadian articles lately completed in The Birmingham Post will have carried your readers across the great Dominion—from the St. Lawrence to the Pacific slope—as in a moving panorama. We have had put before us, in a succession of vivid pictures, the strenuous life of the city and of the settlement. We have had a deftly-drawn portrait of "Jake Canuck" of the plains, rough and ready, full of pluck, energy, self-reliance, optimism and grit, the finest colonist in the world. But one feels that the Canadian town dweller has been somewhat crowded out of the canvas, says an occasional correspondent of The Birmingham Post. His brother of the prairie is a more picturesque personality, and him your able correspondent has delineated with a full measure of appreciation. Yet, the study of the Canadian as a citizen is at least of equal interest, and for this one must go to the older and larger cities of the eastern provinces rather than to the territories of the great Northwest, where the immigrant element so largely leavens the population in the lump. A sketch, therefore, of the older colonist from the social side—by one who knows him pretty well—may not inappropriately be offered as a supplement to those that have appeared before.

In a former article of mine, descriptive of the city of Toronto, I commented upon the American air and aspect of the place. With the exception of Quebec—which is French—this applies to pretty well all the cities of the Dominion. And as it is with the city, so it is with the man. The thing is scarcely to be wondered at. The relation of the colony to the mother country is very like unto that of a man who, in his youth, should have left the paternal roof to seek his fortune over the sea. For years nothing in particular has been heard of him, nor has his fond parent troubled much about him. But, in the fullness of time, the news reaches home that the young man has prospered greatly. Hereupon the old man begins to take a warm interest in this son he had almost forgotten, but who has done such credit to the family, and becomes filled with the desire to go and visit him, and see the place he has made for himself. But nearby where the young man—whose Christian name is "Jake"—had settled, there lived a shrewd old uncle of his named "Sam," who has had his eye on the lad all the time; he has helped him a bit, bullied him a bit, patronized him a bit, chaffed him a bit, but carefully kept on good terms with him throughout. And Uncle Sam being a fine, big self-assertive fellow and a successful man of business withal—Jake, who was young and impressionable, has fallen very much into his ways and manners; so that when the father—whose name is John Bull—comes over to see him, he scarcely recognizes his son for his own.

To all outward seeming the Canadian is an American. In his dress, his manners—and in his ill-manners—in his sports, his slang and his twang, the Canuck affects the Yankee, and in everything, except his political allegiance, inclines to the States rather than to Britain. All this, of course, is gall and wormwood to the Englishman visiting Canada. I am aware that the Canadian himself would deny the impeachment—and in all sincerity, too; the fact being that he is not fully conscious of the extent of his own Americanization. In the matter of accent, for example, he cannot understand being mistaken for an American. Canadian ladies, in particular, wax wroth at being asked their nationality; they "cannot imagine how there can be any question about a thing so obvious." And obvious it may be to themselves. Americans and Canadians can doubtless tell each other apart. But to the average Britisher the accents of the two peoples are as undistinguishable as the dialects of Yorkshire and Lancashire are to the Londoner. Your special correspondent, in one of his articles, said that Americans and Canadians were sufficiently near neighbors to have learned to cordially dislike each other. That may be so. But constant contact has had its inevitable effect, and the younger colonist is a copy of his big cousin from over the border. That would not prevent his fighting him, however, if the need arose, for Canada is as loyal as the sea is salt.

In spite of his Yankeeisms—because of them, in some aspects—the Canadian is a "good fellow." He would be a still better one did he expectorate less. Beside the qualities of sterling worth mentioned above, he has very many likeable points; he is genial, cheery, open-handed and unaffected. He is almost invariably cordial in his welcome of an Englishman—that is, if he is taken from the right side. This means that the English visitor must take the Canadian at his own valuation—which is not a low one. He is cocksure that the Dominion is the keystone of the Empire, and that the Canadian contingent turned the scale of fortune in the Boer war. The wise Englishman will not cavil at either thesis. The story goes of the Canuck who heard of the death of Queen Victoria and the accession of King Edward: "The Prince o' Wales come to the throne, d'ye say? Gosh! he must be well in with Laurier," was his comment. Overweening self-esteem and hypersensitiveness to criticism are the Canadian's most marked weaknesses. You are treading on thin ice the moment you begin to discuss his country with him. He is especially sensitive on the subject of his climate. He resents the popular—and certainly erroneous—belief held in Europe that Canada is a land of almost eternal snow. And, failing to understand that these picturesque winter scenes appeal to the imagination of the people of England—where there is no winter to speak of—he waxes wroth with tourists who take home photos of ice palaces, snowbound streets and frozen waterfalls. Even in your praise of the land you must be careful not to sound too loud the note of amazement at the big things he shows you. It is fatal to let it be seen that the reality far exceeds your previous conception. "Of course," says he—if he detects this suggestion—"you English imagine Canada to be all backwoods and log cabins, and expect to see Red Indians tracking the palefaces down the streets of Toronto and Montreal." Consequently he resents the Britisher going home laden with Indian curiosities as souvenirs of the Dominion.

BADLY LAID OUT.

Ottawa Parliament Buildings Puts Everybody Into Cramped Quarters.

Although very beautiful externally, the Parliament buildings at Ottawa are badly laid out inside. Most of the inconveniences, including the antiquated system of ventilation, the poor acoustic of the Green Chamber, the members could put up with if they only had room to turn around.

Everybody complains of narrow quarters, writes the special correspondent of The Toronto Star. The Commons, with two hundred and fourteen members, each of whom would like to have a cosy corner to think in and write letters in, has a hundred rooms for the business and recreation of the House. The Senate, with eighty-four members, has the same number of rooms, and the lack of accommodation does not press there so hard. Even with more than its fair share of the Legislative building the Senate finds reason, however, to regret that it should be cribbed, cabined, and confined, and sometimes solves the difficulty by turning an official out and taking his room. For instance, Black Rod, who used to have apartments in the building, has been evicted, and now gets an allowance for light, heat, and rent instead.

The Senate can do anything and nobody is offended, or if they are, it doesn't do them any good, for the Senate is high above the judgment of ordinary persons. In the Commons, however, they are more tender of people's feelings, and the hundred rooms have to go a long way. If the House could take the hundred rooms and make a reasonable distribution of them much of the present inconvenience could be avoided. It would be possible for all the officials of the House to be properly provided and to have a large number of rooms left for the accommodation of the members. But the chief thing that is considered on the Commons side is that nothing or nobody shall be disturbed, that no vested right shall be impugned, and no longstanding privilege questioned. No one denies that the members of Parliament should get better treatment than they do in the way of rooms. No one but will admit that No. 16 and No. 8 are too noisy for a writing room, and that there should be provision for members to do their correspondence privately without having to leave the building to do it. But the fact of the matter is that the members must remain crowded until somebody comes along who will curtail the swelling importance of the officials of the House.

The officials are good fellows enough, modest and not overweening in their private capacity, but officially they feel very big and need lots of room to spread. They know that the members of the House are being elbowed out of doors, but they refuse to see that they can do anything to help. When it was suggested to a clerk the other day that he might take his assistant in with him, and so place another room at the disposal of Mr. Speaker, he was both pained and surprised. It would not only hurt the dignity of his assistant, which required a separate office all to itself, but it would be flying in the face of the hoary tradition that a clerk and his assistant should not be herded together. The air of Ottawa encourages these social niceties, and the salary list in the blue books makes the class lines very rigid.

At any rate, this lack of accommodation for the members exists, and there is the usual talk this session of enlargements and alterations which will bring the building up-to-date. The plan most favored is to extend northward the western end of the building, and so to form a new quadrangle with the Speaker's apartments. This would provide at least fifty rooms, and the strain would be relieved for some years to come. The press gallery, among others, would get the accommodation it requires. At present thirty men have to work in two small rooms, neither of which is half as large as the room the haughty clerk refused to share with his assistant.

Game in British Columbia.

In Southern British Columbia you would get elk (wapiti), mule deer, and white-tailed deer, the last two most numerously. In the Rocky Mountains and in the Cascades, mountain sheep, growing scarcer; and high on the summits of the Selkirk Mountains, the white goat. Furbearing animals are rather numerous, from bears, wildcats and wolverines, down to weasels. Rabbits (large and small hares), and various squirrels, gophers and ground-squirrels abound in the valleys, and on the high mountains a marmot (or mountain woodchuck), and the pikas or "conies." The game-birds include several grouse, and in the neighborhood of the Shushway, or Okanagan Lakes, or in many places in the Kootenay region and along the lower Fraser, wild-fowl of all sorts, and shore-birds will be found numerous at the proper season.

Carson, of Belleville, exemption from taxes and $75 per year for the term of 10 years, also five acres of land, grading a road, laying a water pipe and sewer to the factory, was carried almost unanimously, the vote being 457 for the by-law and only one against, out of a possible vote of 520. Mr. Carson will start a canning factory in Napanee.

EYE-STRAIN.

A celebrated oculist says: "Eye-strain is generally to be found in people who have normal vision, as it has been thoroughly demonstrated that the people who have the greatest relief from glasses are those who often see just as well without lenses as with them." He goes on to give reasons which I cannot produce here, but a very apparent one is, that the trouble may not be in the sight proper, but in the muscles that control the same. In fact, this is one of the most serious forms of eye-strain, so that you must not conclude you do not suffer from eye-strain because you can see well, neither must you so conclude because you have worn glasses without benefit, as if the glasses are not correct they may do more harm than good. We make a specialty of obscure causes of eye-strain and their proper correction. No charge for consultation.—Alex. Ray, Optical Specialist, Belleville.

Fighting Dogs.

WEATHER PROPHET HICKS' FORECASTS FOR APRIL

THREE STORM PERIODS SET — MUCH RAIN SURE TO FALL.

The following extracts are taken from Rev. Irl Hicks' forecasts for April:

"A marked change to warmer, with corresponding fall of the barometer, will progressively pass from west to east over the country during the first two or three days of April. Indications of coming change and storms will be apparent to observing people over most parts of the country, and these fore-running indications will culminate in storms of rain, wind and thunder, centering on and touching Monday and Tuesday, the 3rd and 4th. The tendency to hail storms will be greatly increased at this time, a copperish electrical cloud being almost a certain precursor of approaching hail. The period will end in change to much cooler with probable snow flurries northward, and cool to frosty nights will follow up to about the 6th.

"The 7th and 8th are central dates, on and touching which reactionary changes to storm conditions will take place. These changes to warmer, falling barometer, with outbreaks of rain and storminess, will begin in western, and make their transit to eastern sections, being followed by rapid rise of the barometer and change to much cooler. Electrical, Venus storms until past the middle of April, should be warnings of sudden change to cooler with frost.

"A regular Vulcan storm period extends from the 11th to the 15th. The changes that go before the formation and approach of cloudiness and storms will appear to the westward as we enter this period, and later, say from the 13th to 15th, rain with thunder and storminess will touch numerous localities in their progress eastward over the country. The Mercury disturbance blending with that of Venus at this time, will almost surely prolong and intensify storm conditions, so that little or no intermission of settled weather will follow this period before the beginning of another.

"The next storm period includes the 17th to the 20th, inclusive. The Easter full moon on the celestial equator and in perigee are embraced in the 17th to the 19th. Very threatening electrical storms, violent and possibly tornadic in places westward and central, are possible and probable at this time. These storms will break up into snow squalls over much of the country northward, and be followed by several days of bleak to frosty weather. Late sleet storms will visit many sections on and touching the 18th and 19th.

"The next regular storm period is central on the 24th, covering the 23rd to the 27th. The barometer will fall generally during the progress of this period, and April showers will thicken into wider and heavier thunder storms. At all the periods in April up to this period, many parts of the country will get more rain than for many months past. Low lands in all central to western states will have too much. Change to fair and cooler will follow this period, up to the 29th. On the 29th and 30th reactionary storm conditions will return. April will end with much warmer weather, low barometer, and a series of thunder showers passing eastwardly across the country."

"THE FOUNDING OF CANADA"

A NOVA SCOTIA LADY TALKED INTERESTINGLY TO THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY LAST NIGHT.

A goodly number were present last evening at a meeting of the Historical Society, which was held in the Fifteenth Officers' quarters, on Church street.

The President, Mr. J. Frith Jeffers, presided over the gathering.

The address of the evening was given by Mrs. Owen, of Annapolis Royal, N.S., her subject being "The Founding of Canada." The speaker's address was of considerable length, and demonstrated that she was thoroughly conversant with the subject matter. Amusing incidents of early settlers were interesting features of the talk. During the evening the Misses Benjamin contributed two instrumental selections, upon the piano and violin.

Building up the Park.

A visit to Victoria Park this morning showed that the work of filling in the low places is going on quite extensively already this spring. For nearly a week a number of teams have been hauling cinders, etc., from various places about the city, and depositing them on the lower part of the park, raising it up considerably. When the sweeping from the streets are deposited over this it will form an excellent coating. The Chairman of Parks, in conversation to-day with an Intelligencer representative, stated that if he can secure the means he will do considerable filling in.

ALL DANGER OF FLOOD OVER FOR THIS YEAR.

CORBYVILLE ICE CAME DOWN LAST EVENING, BUT WAS WELL SMASHED UP, WHEN IT ARRIVED.

The ice from the vicinity of Corbyville came down yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock, but no damage was sustained, as it was well broken up when it reached the city. This had the effect of backing up the water for some time, but in the evening the greater portion of the jam in the harbor moved out into the bay and the water fell considerably. All fears of a flood have now vanished, and the residents of "the flats," who were kept in suspense for a couple of days, are able to breathe easily again. The general supposition is that the channel made in the harbor did much good.

During the shove on Monday night some damage was done to the rear end of the tannery at Canifton. This was owing to the ice taking a side course, instead of following the regular channel of the river.

There is still a considerable quantity of ice in the river in the vicinity of the bridge at Foxboro, but this will not cause any trouble in the city, as there will be a space for it to move out in when it arrives.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A GREAT PLAY COMING.

That charming historical drama, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," will appear at the opera house here on Saturday evening. It appeared at the Princess Theatre, in Toronto, the week beginning February 20th, and of its production the Toronto Globe said: "Charles Major's novel, 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall,' which was presented for the first time at the Princess Theatre last night by a company headed by Bertha Galland in the title role, was received with much interest and favor. The playwright has turned out a romantic comedy, over which hangs for a time the threatening cloud of tragedy, and which, therefore, offers a good deal of contrast. The stage adaptation has been done with considerable skill, although the task of condensing the story must have offered many difficulties. Bertha Galland, the talented young actress, who, it may be remembered, made a very favorable impression here when leading lady with the popular romantic actor, Hackett, gave a very clever impersonation of the heroine, both in the comedy incidents and in the more serious episodes. She presented the lighter aspects of the role with a winsome humor that quite won the hearts of the audience, and she was called before the curtain several times during the evening. In the slightly shrewish tendency of the part in the first act she was specially happy, while in the emotional scenes in which she pleads for the life of her lover, and is finally impelled by her love to betray his confidence as to the hiding place of Mary Stuart, she revealed a depth of feeling which the gaiety of her comedy scarcely promised. The support was satisfactory, and the scenic environment and costumes well preserved the atmosphere of the story."

"DORA THORNE."

"Dora Thorne," a dramatized novel of the present season, marks a new departure in melo-drama. The audience cannot help but engage themselves sympathetically with every turn of the fortunes of Dora Thorne, a girl whom the English would call "low born"; who won the affection of and married the duke's son. A large share of the success of the performance is due to the cast, which is strong throughout, including as it does, Miss Cuba Niblo in the name part, Miss Isabel Sherman, who causes all the trouble, and that sterling actor of old men characters, Mr. George C. Benton. "Dora Thorne" will be seen at the Carman on Monday, April 3.

What Rev. Mr. Ffrench Thinks,

Rev. C. A. Ffrench, of Tweed, writes as follows to the Toronto News:

"Close by here a few months ago the few Protestant children attending a Roman Catholic Public School were publicly insulted by being called by their companions "Protestant pups." But they did not run away with finger in mouth and claim a "Protestant Separate School." They had too much good sense. They reported the matter to the Roman Catholic mistress, and the affair was soon adjusted. Does "A Looker On" claim that all the convicts in St. Vincent de Paul are educated by Protestant Public Schools? Absurd! If the fanatics of Ireland (Romanist and Protestant), can get along very well together in the National Schools there, why cannot we get along together in National Schools in Canada?

ATHLETICS.

New Kind of Wrestling.

The nowadays crazy so-called followers of athletics in the United States are going foolish over some new Japanese trick wrestling called "jiu-do." Here is a description of how it works.

Two little nut-brown men from the land of the Mikado threw each other around Columbia University's gymnasium last night before a crowd of students. The little men demonstrate that "jiu-do" is an improvement upon ju-jitsu.

The two wrestlers, whose muscles seemed to be abruptly absent when they weren't in motion, were Professor T. Tomita, of the Peers' College, of Tokio, and Professor E. Naeda, of the First Higher School, of Tokio. Dr. Takanine made as adequate explanatory remarks as he could, while the demonstration was going on. The Japs worked with such rapidity that none could tell exactly how the tricks were done. Mr. Tomita yanked Mr. Naeda toward him and then, scornful like, threw him away, Mr. Naeda bringing up against the wall.

Then Mr. Naeda came back for more, and playfully jerked Mr. Tomita's arm almost out of its socket. In the middle of the strenuous seance, while Mr. Tomita was kiting through the air, a rugged student was lured into the battlefield and induced to wrestle. In three minutes he was presented with three falls, and tottered from the scene of action.

The idea of jiu-do is to give and take falls without injury. The little nut-brown men fell in a heap, like a ball, and rolled over and over. Their heads never touched the ground. Their bodies never met while in combat. Only the arms and hands, manoeuvring dexterously, were called into play.

SPORTING NOTES.

The hockey season being over, it seems to be up to somebody to try and lay wires for either baseball or lacrosse in this city this summer. In other towns the boys are getting together and organizing. Why not in Belleville?

Sir Thomas Lipton seems determined to have one more try for the America's Cup. Mr. A. Revell, of Chicago, has received a letter from Lipton, written on board Sir Thomas' yacht in the Indian ocean. The writer says he is determined to have one more try for the America's Cup—the famous "Old Mug," as he called it. The only difficulty in the way was to find a designer, but he will give the matter attention as soon as he returns from Ceylon. He ended his letter by saying that he would be very much disappointed if he cannot arrange for another contest next year.

The Boston baseball champions are not spring chickens. "Cy" Young and Charley Farrell are the particular ancients of the team. Each expert is 38 years old. La Chance and Burkett, each 35; Freeman, Selbach and Criger, 33; Collins and Stahl, 32; or nine men over 30 years of age. Dinneen and Tannehill are each 29 years of age.

N. Lajoie, the great ball player, this year signed with Cleveland, will draw a salary of $10,000. This figures out $71 per game for 140 games. Allowing two hours for each game, this is $35 an hour. His expenses on the road are all paid.

The series of hockey contests in Montreal during the season recently closed were witnessed by 45,000 spectators. Of that number 33,667 saw the games played at the Arena, an average attendance of 1,980. At the Stadium an aggregate of 6,000 saw Federal League hockey, and at the Victoria Rink some 5,000 odd saw C. A.H.L. games. The Ottawa-Wanderer match at the Arena brought out the banner crowd of the season, 6,055 partisans cheering the battle.

Under the arrangement of each heat a race in the M. & M. and Chamber of Commerce Stakes at Detroit, nine horses have a chance to win money, and in addition non-money winners have a chance at the Consolation, making eighteen chances to win a portion of the stage, $1,300 will be paid to the winner of each heat in the M. & M. $10,000 stake, $700 to second and $500 to the third horse, and one-half of these amounts in the Chamber of Commerce Stake. Should a horse win a heat or any portion of the stake to be distanced later, he will receive the money won prior to finishing behind the flag.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

To The Editor of The Intelligencer:

My Dear Sir, — Permit me to say to the young miscreants who are shooting and killing our birds, and to their parents, that I will make such an example of the first boy convicted before me, as I trust will stop this wicked slaughter. I ask every citizen to give me names, and summonses will be immediately issued. I authorize citizens who shall detect boys using catapults against birds, to seize them, and hand them to the police.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

AN APPRECIATION OF ITS GOOD WORK — CLASSES REACHED BY Its INFLUENCE.

A quarter of a century ago the Salvation Army in America, numbered eight persons, says the Schenectady, N.Y. Star. Its work was commenced in England and this was the next country touched by it. A little start was made here as far back as 1872, but as it was impossible to send reinforcements nothing of permanent value was accomplished. In 1879 a second start was made in Philadelphia, which was more promising, and an appeal for help sent to Gen. Booth was responded to favorably, and in the late winter or early spring of 1880 seven "hallelujah lassies" landed in New York and the Salvation Army had come to the United States to stay.

In its early days the Salvation Army was laughed at and ridiculed mercilessly, but it kept right on its work after its own fashion and its own ideas. Credit for being the first convert to the army methods in America belongs to a common drunkard familiarly known by the name of "Ash-barrel Jimmy." The name and the person are suggestive of the class of people reached by the army and the sort of work it has done in this country. At present all the larger cities have a detachment of the Salvation Army at work and there are in America 3,706 officers and employes. There are 736 corps and outposts. An effective attachment is the farm colony of which there are three, in Ohio, Colorado, and California. People no longer laugh at the Salvation Army, for it comes in contact with a class that could not easily be reached in any other way and though some of its methods are open to conservative criticism, it accomplishes a great deal of good, for which it deserves credit.

A GRUESOME EXHIBIT.

BODY OF YOUNG FRENCH-CANADIAN GIANT WHO DIED AT ST. LOUIS.

Montreal, March 28.—The Dominion Express Co. have an embalmed giant in their office at the Windsor station, and they are somewhat ill at ease because of its presence and of the amount of space it occupies. It would have been on exhibition in Montreal before this, and therefore off the hands of the express company, had the city officials given a permit to have it set up to satisfy morbid curiosity. But the city refused, and now those who sought permission seem to regard it as an elephant on the hands of the express company. This embalmed giant comprises the remains of Beaupre, the young French-Canadian, who was exhibited at the St. Louis Exposition, and who died there. Beaupre stood nearly 9 feet high, and was large in proportion. When he died some speculating showmen secured possession of the body, and, having duly embalmed it, decided that Montreal would be a good place to exhibit. The box containing the remains is so large that its contents would never be suspected. It has twelve heavy handles.

Entertained Their Friends

A number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. John Fenn were last evening entertained by them at their residence on Victoria Avenue. The evening was pleasantly spent in social intercourse, and the company were loud in their praise of the hospitality extended to them.

Stroke May be Fatal.

Mr. Thos. R. Garrett, who resides on Forin street, was yesterday the victim of a paralytic stroke, and his condition is such that it is feared he will not survive. Mr. Garrett was a mail clerk on the Madoc train, but owing to illness was compelled to relinquish his duties two weeks ago.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

BOURASSA'S "HOT STUFF."

Made Up of Ludicrous Gesticulations and Extravagance of Language—Picturesque, But Weightless.

Ottawa, March 29.—Henri Bourassa, M. P. for Labelle, proved a drawing card to the patrons of the Parliamentary galleries yesterday. He was expected to say something "hot," and this expectation in a measure he fulfilled. His denunciation of the Orangeites was not notable for its mildness and his appeals for "justice" to the minority was marked by anger rather than solicitude. There was no body to the speech. What was not the froth of rhetoric was the empty rags of prejudice. In argument he was pitifully weak and but for his ludicrous gesticulations and extravagance of language his speech would have fallen very flat.

Whirling Epithets.

He denounced the Opposition for its policy of depriving the minority of its privileges and bestowed a few whirling epithets on certain unnamed person, whom he charged with being responsible for the modification of the school clauses in the bill. Bourassa found passion and prejudice seething in Ontario and in fact in all parts of Canada outside of that paradise of breadth of mind and tolerance, his own Province of Quebec. He will vote for the autonomy bill, but with considerable misgiving that Sir Wilfrid allowed Sifton and a few other bigots to emasculate the schools clauses.

Blain Was Forcible.

Richard Blain, of Peel, followed in a speech which brought out some very forcible arguments against the bill. In the evening Solicitor-General Lemieux waxed eloquent over the rights of the minority. His speech was reasonably moderate in tone, though he had some very harsh things to say concerning Ontario papers which have dared to criticize the autonomy bill. Mr. McCarthy, of Calgary, criticized the bill very effectively and gave the House a clear appreciation of western opinion in connection with the schools clauses.

Petitions For and Against.

Mr. Bourassa presented twenty petitions praying that the autonomy bill be passed without amendment. Several of the petitions asked for the minority in the new Provinces the same privileges that are allowed the Protestant minority in Quebec. Altogether 50 petitions regarding the autonomy bill were handed in. With the exception of Mr. Bourassa's list all the petitions are against the proposed legislation.

Centre Toronto Election.

Mr. Foster asked when the Government would take steps to give effect to the Speaker's writ for a bye-election in Centre Toronto. The Premier replied that the Secretary of State was already making arrangements for the manhood suffrage lists. Mr. Osler thought this an unusual proceeding. He promised to give a fuller statment to-day.

Dr. Sproule wanted to know when a Minister of the Interior would be appointed. The Premier did not deign to answer.

Halifax and Esquimalt.

Ottawa, March 29.—The action of the Imperial authorities in withdrawing the Imperial naval forces from Halifax and Esquimalt was discussed from various standpoints in the Senate yesterday. The prevailing opinion expressed was that Britain's admirals knew best how the fleet could be most effectively disposed of, and, furthermore, that even if the new arrangement was unwise, Canada, having contributed nothing to naval establishment, had no right to pose as a critic.

Mr. Clements, for Mr. Foster, moved the adjournment of the debate and the House rose at 12.15 a. m.

BOWEL POISON.

Thousands of Men and Women Poisoned and Don't Know It.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Bowel poison means blood tainted by foul secretions absorbed from the bowels. Here are the symptoms:

If your skin is disfigured by eruptions, humors, pimples, blotches, sores or eczema; if you itch and burn and your skin is scaly and rough; if you feel tired and worn out, your nerves weak, constipated, cross and depressed; if your head feels heavy and aching, your eyes blur and specks float across your vision; if you have cold feet and your hands get sweaty and sticky—if you have these danger signals they point unerringly to bowel poison, impure blood, and show that your stomach, liver and bowels are not working right.

Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills are what you must have to make your bowels right; they will remove the impurities from your blood by toning up the liver and bowels so that they will perform their functions naturally and regularly. They cleanse and invigorate the blood by stimulating the sluggish liver and regulating the bowels by their gentle laxative action. They are a sure and unfailing cure for bowel poison in young or old.

McINTOSH BROS.

ALLAN LONEY ON TRIAL

For Killing Alcide Laurin in Hockey Game Last February.

The Fatal Blow on the Hockey Field at Maxville—Witnesses Tell How Laurin Was Struck—Was Seen to Threaten Loney With His Fists—Blow Struck Was a Hard One—Case Not Finished.

Cornwall, March 29.—The Loney manslaughter case, arising out of the death of Alcide Laurin, of Alexandria, in a hockey match at Maxville, opened at the Assizes yesterday morning before Justice Teetzel and is still in progress. There was considerable difficulty over the selection of a jury, the Crown objecting to eleven and the defence to eight before a full panel was secured.

Contrary to O. H. A. Rules.

Walter H. Dick, of Alexandria, was the first witness. He was cover-point on the Alexandria team. Mr. Dick said that the match was played under the O. H. A. rules, one of which, No. 13, forbids raising the stick above the shoulder. These rules he read. Laurin was rover and captain of the Alexandria team. About 90 or 100 Alexandrians were present at the game. Loney played point for the Maxville team. The match began about 9 p. m. He saw Loney strike Laurin on the head, and Laurin fell.

Laurin had gone up the ice with the puck, passing several Maxville men until he met Loney, who checked him.

In reply to His Lordship, Mr. Dick explained that a legitimate check was striking an opponent's stick so as to get the puck away from him.

Struck Hard Blow.

After breaking Laurin's stick, Loney struck Laurin on the head. This blow was struck after the referee's whistle had been blown to stop the game. Mr. Dick said he was too far away to hear the sound of the blow. He was the first man to reach Laurin, and rubbed his face with snow. He then saw Leo Laurin strike Loney over the face with a hockey stick. It seemed to land on his nose, and there was blood on Loney's face. Referring to the condition of the rink, he said the light was fairly good, but the ice was very uneven. The fatal blow was struck with considerable force, Loney swinging his stick over his shoulder.

Match Was Rough.

Cross-examined by Mr. Pringle, Mr. Dick, the first witness in the Loney case, said that it was a rough match from start to finish. Loney was not ruled off in this match. He did not remember Loney being ruled off in three previous games. Laurin had been ruled off in some previous games. He did not see Laurin ruled off in this game. He was not in a position to see Laurin strike Loney if he did so. According to the rules, if Loney was proceeding to his own goal after shoving the puck up the ice, Laurin should get back to his position also.

Roughest He Had Ever Seen.

W. J. Simpson, of Alexandria, was next called. He was a spectator at the game and saw the fatal blow struck, although he did not see the previous checking. Laurin seemed to have turned slightly stooping as if to pick up something from the ice when Loney raised his stick over his shoulder and struck him. From the witness' position it looked as if the blow struck on the back of the head. It was the roughest game of hockey he had ever seen. Under cross-examination Mr. Simpson said that he had not heard Laurin say he would put Loney out of business. He did not see Laurin ruled off for a scrap with McDougall. To the judge he said the blow was delivered with great force.

Threatened Loney.

A couple of hundred people were unable to gain admission at the afternoon session. The first witness was John A. McMillan, M. P. P., Glengarry. He was subpoenaed at Toronto. He was present at the hockey match in Alexandria. He saw Loney check Laurin heavily. The whole mixup did not take more than six or eight seconds, both men checking. Laurin's stick was broken after the mix-up. Some player, he thought Stiles, of Maxville, took away the puck. When he next looked at Loney and Laurin, the latter made a motion as if to strike Loney with his fist. They were close enough for Laurin to reach Loney. He then illustrated how Loney stood when striking the final blow. He could not hear the sound of the blow. There was at the moment considerable excitement—young partisans shouting encouragement and advice to the players. He saw Leo Laurin after his brother fell strike Loney, it seemed to him, on the neck or shoulders. At the time Loney struck Alcide Laurin the latter was slightly stooping.

Other Witnesses Called.

Other witnesses called by the Crown yesterday were Dr. A. L. MacDonald and Dr. K. McLennan, of Alexandria, who conducted the post-mortem: J. Douglas MacDonald, player on the Alexandria team; D. A. MacDonald and Donald MacPhee, the Alexandria timekeeper and umpire, respectively; W. Forster, G. Sabourin, P. Deprate, J. McLeister, J. Gibbons and Fred Kemp, of Alexandria, and J. R. Moffatt, of Maxville, all supporters.

The substance of the evidence was that Loney had broken Laurin's hockey stick. Laurin turned and threatened him with his fists and Loney struck Laurin on the side of the head with his stick. All the witnesses were severely cross-examined by Mr. Pringle, but while they differed on some essentials the majority were unanimous on the cardinal points.

The doctors said Laurin's death was due to a fracture of the skull, and Dr. MacDonald thought this might possibly have resulted from a fall on an elevated hard substance.

The witnesses for the Crown at the evening session of the Loney trial were the referee of the fatal game, B. O'Connor, and Leo Laurin, a brother of the deceased.

The Defence.

R. A. Pringle, M. P., then opened the case for the defence, and besides Dr. Hamilton, of Cornwall, who testified as to how easily a skull might be fractured, he called George Chalmers, Thos. Johnson, W. Doucett, Cecil Weegar, and J. A. Welsh, all residents of Maxville. The substantial points brought out by their evidence were that Laurin had broken his hockey stick over Loney's leg, had followed up Loney and struck Loney with his fist before the death blow was delivered. A couple of the witnesses believed that this blow came while Loney was recovering his balance after Laurin's attack.

The case will be continued to-day.

QUICK IS INSANE.

Coroner's Jury Says Strangler of Brother Is a Lunatic.

Strathroy, March 29.—The inquest into the death of Alfred Quick, strangled by his brother, Robert, in a fit of insanity at the latter's home in Caradoc Township on Saturday afternoon last, was continued for the greater part of yesterday in the Town Hall before Coroner Dr. A. Thompson.

A large number of witnesses who were early on the scene after the murder, and the near neighbors of both the accused and the deceased were examined.

The opinion of the witnesses was that the prisoner was violently insane at the time of the murder and had, in fact, exhibited unmistakeable symptoms of unsound mind for a number of weeks previous.

The principal feature of the proceedings was the evidence given by Drs. A. S. Thompson and McCabe, who conducted the post-mortem examination in Tanton's undertaking rooms on Sunday last. They found that death was due to strangulation.

The result of the inquest yesterday was that the deceased came to his death by strangulation, due to throttling. Robert Quick was pronounced insane.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

ABOUT "BLOOD BITTERS" AND "TONICS."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of 'tonics,' 'pills' and 'cathartics,' which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both; they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.

Ready For Another Duel.

Japs and Russians to be at Each Other's Throats in a Week.

Column of Japanese Moving Against Kirin With the Intention of Isolating Gen. Linevitch's Army from a Valuable Base of Supplies, the Ussuri District—Negative Peace Terms from Russia to Japan.

St Petersburg, March 30.—Another duel between the two opposing armies in Manchuria may be on the program for the coming week. The Russians, according to the Associated Press' Harbin correspondent, are now strongly fortifying their positions at Sipinghai, against which the Japanese are reported to be gathering in force. The reported Russian retirement from Sipinghai to Chaoumiaodzi was incorrect, due to a telegraphic error in the confusion of similar names, Chaoumiaodzi with Shuamnyaotszi, south of Sipinghai, from whence the Russians' advanced force retired to the fortified line at Sipinghai. The Japanese followed to some extent, but a border of twenty miles of detached ground still remains between the two armies, over which the Japanese probably will not advance until they are ready to attack.

To Cut Him Off.

Equally important news is that a column of Japanese is moving against Kirin, perhaps with the intention of turning the position eastward and striking at the Vladivostock line of communication with the double purpose of isolating the fortress and separating Gen. Linevitch's army from a valuable base of supplies, the Ussuri district.

There has been no fighting of importance latterly. Reconnaisances establish the fact that the Japanese are gathering in heavy force twenty miles south of Sipinghai, evidently intending to attack the Russian position at Sipinghai. The Russans are strongly fortified there and apparently expect to make a stand. The country between is comparatively clear of Japanese.

Oyama Names a Date.

The number of Chinese bandits is constantly augmenting. Chinese continue to report that Field Marshal Oyama has issued proclamations fixing the date for the occupation of Harbin as April 10, but this prediction seems apparently improbable of fulfilment.

20,000 Prisoners in Japan.

Tokio, March 30.—Twenty thousand Russian prisoners, captured in the battle of Mukden, have already arrived in Japan.

A revised unofficial estimate of the Japanese casualties in the battles of Mukden and Tie Pass place the number at 57,000. Flags captured at Mukden have been presented to the Emperor.

Gen. Mayeda, who was wounded at Mukden, is dead.

NEGATIVE PEACE TERMS.

What Russia Will Do to Gain Peace—No Concession of Territory.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—The Associated Press is in a position to announce that a step in the direction of peace has actually been made.

Russia has indirectly made known to Japan the negative conditions upon which peace may be concluded, viz., no concession of territory and no indemnity, leaving Japan to determine whether negotiations can be begun upon that basis.

No reply from Japan has yet reached the Russian Government.

The above report presents practically all the facts obtainable.

Denials Which Really Are Not.

Officially the authorities continue to deny stoutly that Russia has made any proposals to Japan.

This is literally true, as Russia has only made known the negative conditions, leaving the intermediary to convey these conditions on its own responsibility to Japan.

Diplomats in St. Petersburg are convinced that some thing is in progress, but none of those in a position to know will acknowledge that they are aware what has actually or is being done.

Tried to Commit Suicide.

Paris, March 30.—An unconfirmed rumor from St. Petersburg is published here this morning to the effect that Emperor Nicholas made an attempt to commit suicide and wounded himself in the hand. The rumor further says that the Emperor's design was frustrated by the intervention of his mother, the Empress Dowager.

One of the Old School.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—Gen. Batjanoff, the new commander of the 3rd Manchurian army, is one of the old school of the Russian army, having commenced his military career in 1853. He served with distinction in the Crimean war and in the Russo-Turkish war of 1878.

Stopped by Japs.

Seattle, Wash., March 30.—Japanese cruisers twice stopped and boarded the British tramp steamer Ocean Monarch, which arrived here yesterday, twenty-six days out, while she was in the Japan Sea, on her voyage to this port from Kobe. After examining the vessel and her papers, the boarding officers allowed her to proceed. Her officers say the coast of Northern Japan and Siberia is so thoroughly guarded that it would be impossible for a successful attempt at blockade running.

Over a Hundred Wounds.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—Baron Von Nolken, the chief of police, who was wounded by the explosion of a bomb on Sunday, is improving. He received 120 separate wounds, cuts and scratches.

Socialist Demonstration.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—The funeral yesterday of a student named Yakovleff, who on his liberation from eight months' solitary imprisonment for circulating propagandist literature, hanged himself, his mind being unhinged, was the occasion of a stirring revolutionary demonstration. Disregarding police warnings crowds of students followed the funeral cortege, singing revolutionary songs and scattering pamphlets. The coffin was covered with wreaths from Socialists, revolutionaries and workmen.

Reforms for Poland.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—Emperor Nicholas has instructed M. Maximovitch, Governor-General of Warsaw, to elaborate the reforms necessary for the prosperity of Poland.

MINISTER OF MINES.

Liberal Member C. N. Smith Favors Appointment of Mr. Gamey or Mr. Smyth—Address Debaters.

Toronto, March 30.—To-day will see the end of the debate on the speech from the Throne. The House yesterday listened to a good speech from C. N. Smith, the Liberal member for Sault Ste. Marie, who promised to hold up the hands of the Government in every effort to promote the prosperity of new Ontario. He expressed decided preference for Mr. Gamey or Mr. Smyth as head of the proposed department of mines, and said the people of New Ontario, irrespective of party, would not be satisfied if the minister was not a resident of that section. The other speakers were Dr. Lewis, Evan Fraser and Dr. Nixon.

On motion of the Premier, the following committee was appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the care of the library: Whitney, Foy, Matheson, Pyne, Hendrie, Lucas, Ross, Harcourt, Graham and Preston, of Brant.

The adjournment was moved by Geo. Pattinson (North Waterloo). There is a general disposition to conclude today. Mr. Gamey was desirous of being heard, but will not come on until the debate on the budget.

Opposition Caucus.

A caucus of the Opposition members was held yesterday, Mr. Harcourt presiding. C. M. Bowman was elected chief whip and J. B. Tudhope assistant. Matters of policy were discussed in a general way, but no action was taken.

Private Hospitals Get No Aid.

Hon. Mr. Hanna has decided that none other but public hospitals may share in the grants made by the Province toward hospitals. The rule will be strictly adhered to, he says.

The grant has been $110,000 per year, divided amongst the hospitals on the basis of the aggregate number of days spent in hospitals by patients. Sixty public hospitals are now partaking of the grant. Only half a dozen private hospitals will be affected by the new rule.

Enforcement of Fisheries Act.

The Commissioner of Public Works received a deputation from Collingwood and Meaford asking for the better enforcement of fishing regulations in Georgian Bay, beset by poachers to a large extent. Consideration was promised by Hon. Dr. Reaume.

The Speaker will give the first of the sessional dinner this evening in the Speaker's apartments.

Canea, Island of Crete, March 23.—Prince George has issued a proclamation declaring that the powers had ordered foreign troops to participate in the restoration of order. The British cruiser Juno has arrived at Suda Bay.

Dr. Mills Very Ill.

Ottawa, March 30.—Dr. Mills, of the Canadian Railway Commission, is seriously ill with kidney trouble. He was low Monday and Tuesday, but was reported to be improved last night.

A New Anaesthetic.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

Test experiments are now being conducted by medical men in Ottawa with a new anaesthetic of a most curious and simple description, discovered by Professor Redard, a Swiss scientist. It consists in the use of blue light focused on the patient's eyes. The experimental outfit for this anaesthetic process is a rather simple one, a 16-candle incandescent electric lamp, a nickel-plated reflector, and a blue veil being sufficient. The lamp is fitted with a blue bulb and placed at about 6 inches from the eye, this being the point of convergence of the light rays, while the head of the patient as also the lamp itself is covered with the blue veil to avoid any stray daylight. Two or three minutes' action is sufficient to allow of the extraction of a tooth tooth without any pain.

The process has been used by the inventor for more than three years. According to the Scientific American it is neither general nor a local anaesthesia as obtained with anaesthetic substances, insensibility being produced merely by the action of blue light on the nervous center of vision, reacting most likely on the other nervous centers. All the experiments made by the Geneva professor go to show that blue has a decisive anaesthetic action. A great number of patient has been made unconscious by this means, and the results have been presented recently to the congress of the Swiss Odontological society, held this year at Lausanne, Switzerland. It should be mentioned that red, yellow, and other rays did not show any result, while green and violet lights, most nearly related to blue light, were found to be also efficient, though to a smaller degree.

There is one point which apparently remains doubtful. Prof. Redard does not state whether the person rendered unconscious by his process is in a state of sleep, either natural or hypnotic; but according to the process itself, it would seem as though there were a kind of hypnotic sleep, disappearing, however, without any prejudicial effects the moment the operation is finished and the action of the blue light discontinued, when the one experimented on seems to awake and states that no pain has been experienced.

It is only a few years since a Danish scientist discovered that red light was a cure for cuticular diseases, such as lupus, and it is expected that eventually, with the aid of the X-ray, the red light can be projected into the human body to cure tuberculosis and even cancer. It has been proven that smallpox patients kept in a room where only red light reaches them will not "pit" or be disfigured by the disease. The enlistment of colored lights as auxiliaries in medical treatment may be only in its infancy and discoveries as wonderful as those in the field of electricity may yet be made in that connection.

A DANGEROUS HABIT.

Gladstone's Physician Gives Warning Against a Growing American Custom.

The growing habit amongst Americans of taking a mint tablet or some other so called digestive after eating a hearty meal, is something that Sir Andrew Clarke, Mr. Gladstone's physician advises strongly against, saying, "It is absolutely dangerous to take into the stomach remedies which are popularly supposed to aid in the digestion of food."

There is nothing known to the science of medicine that can perform the work of the human stomach. Drugs do not and cannot digest the food. They simply decompose it. What can be more revolting or disgusting than the thought of taking something into the stomach that is going to turn the good food you have eaten into a mass of corruption.

The only way to overcome indigestion and its evil effects is to remove all irritation, congestion and inflammation from the stomach, liver and intestines, and Mi-o-na is the only agent known that will do this.

When a Mi-o-na tablet is taken before each meal every trace of irritation and inflammation is removed from the stomach and digestive organs will extract from the food all that goes to make good, rich blood, firm muscle, steady nerves and a sound healthy body. If you suffer with headaches, indigestion, flatulency, spots before the eyes, vertigo, or dizziness, palpitation of the heart, sleeplessness, or any stomach trouble, get a fifty-cent box of Mi-o-na from Mr. J. S. McKeown, one of our most reliable druggists, whose faith in the remedy is shown by his offer to return the money if Mi-o-na does not give complete satisfaction.

Daily Intelligencer.

HOW CANADA LOST THE GERMAN MARKET.

Intelligent people hardly need to be told that Germany is one of the world's great purchasers of foodstuffs. In 1903 she purchased abroad no less than $170,000,000 worth of grain alone. Her annual purchases for the last few years have averaged nearly as much. It is a market worth cultivating. Up to the time when the Laurier Government got it into its head that it possessed the power of humbling Germany, Canada was making satisfactory progress in that market. Germany was taking every year an increasing quantity of Canadian wheat. Then came the tariff war. The figures show what happened:

Year.	Canadian wheat exports to Germany.
1900	$182,930
1901	268,637
1902	754,042
1903	537,453
1904	178,816
1905 (six months of present year)

But for the tariff war inaugurated by the Laurier administration, the Montreal Gazette remarks, the Canadian exports of wheat to Germany would have gone on increasing by leaps and bounds, because of the decreasing wheat exports by the United States, up to recently one of the leading sources of supply for Germany's wheat requirements. Thus, in 1902, the United States shipped 27,655,180 bushels of wheat to Germany. In 1903 the shipments dropped to 16,414,160, and last year to the very small total of 6,411,405 bushels. As shown above Canada was not the country Germany looked to to supply the deficit caused by the falling off of the shipments from the United States. The Argentine Republic got the market, In 1902 Argentina only shipped 5,339,135 bushels to Germany; in 1903 this had increased to 10,432,317 bushels, while last year Argentina supplied Germany with 17,993,914 bushels, ranking second only to Russia, which supplied 19,377,637 bushels.

Is a tariff which cuts Canada off from a market the Argentine Republic has found so profitable, a good tariff?

"A GROWING ALIENATION."

The New York Evening Post thus deplores the fact that Canada is, every year, becoming more and more independent of the United States: "Naturally enough, Newfoundland will retaliate for the burking of the Hay-Bond treaty by cutting off the bait supply of our fishermen. This goes to prove that even the Gloucester fishermen, in whose interest the treaty was amended out of existence, cannot eat their cake and have it. Such a discrimination as it is said Newfoundland will make against our fisheries, is the sign of a growing and unfortunate alienation. Yesterday a prominent Canadian newspaper proprietor told our Washington correspondent that not for years had the annexation sentiment been so slight in Canada. This is well so far as it means going slow in the matter of a doubtful union, but ill so far as it means that Canada is generally indifferent to the relation she bears to us. Such a feeling is natural, for in almost all her negotiations with us she has met with unmerited rebuffs. Meanwhile she is gaining in riches, and the possibilities of mutual profitable relations are constantly increasing. There never was a time when a reasonable readjustment of tariffs was likely to be more valuable, but what can we expect when the Senate picks all reciprocity treaties to pieces or ignores them, and the very name of revision is anathema in Republican councils."

PRIZES FOR HOME GARDENS.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society, through the committee on school gardens and native plants, is offering prizes for children's home gardens which are made and cared for by children in Massachusetts under sixteen years of age. Last year the offer was made for the first time, and the prizes won by three boys, two living in Ayer, the other in Groton.

This year more prizes are offered. The children are to keep a diary of their gardens, and to write the committee a letter, accompanied by a photograph of the garden, before November 1. All entries for prizes have to be sent in before June 1. This is in order that the committee may visit as many of these gardens as possible, talk them over, with the children, and make a study of the work which will enable them to spread the movement throughout the State.

Many children now have gardens, and it is felt that every girl and boy should have a little plot which they can call their very own. Parents can assign a garden plot to each child, and provide money or means of earning it, so that the children can buy seeds. They can further help by telling how the soil should be prepared, how the plants should be cared for. Some will gladly buy fresh vegetables from the children, rather than get them at the stores.

Some scheme like the above might not be a bad thing to start in Belleville, this year of an Old Boys' Reunion.

My! but I had a lovely time in the City Hall last night! Those Peake Sisters, they were just the cutest pieces of femininity that ever came from Alaska.

Through an inexcusable oversight I forgot to look in Doc Gibson's X-ray machine. Perhaps if I had I might have been able to see how long it will be before all doctors in the city are allowed admission to the Hospital.

• • •

If I can arrange it, I mean, to-night, to take a friend of mine in the City Council up to the X-ray machine and have a look at the inside of his head. I've thought for some time that his thinking works were a little too big for his skull. This will be a gilt-edged chance to find out for sure.

• • •

How would it be to use that X-ray machine on all candidates for the Council, after this? The idea is worth thinking about, anyhow.

• • •

The good ladies of the W.C.A. are to be congratulated on the success of their entertainment. As financiers they are in the gilt-edged class.

• • •

The Whitney Government, it seems to me, has been guilty of an inexcusable oversight. The idea of turning out the late License Commissioners for West Hastings without even giving them a vote of thanks does not make a bit with me at all. I've been waiting for some time, to see if anybody would attend to it, but really I can't wait any longer. I beg to move, seconded by Dr. Potts, of Stirling, that Mr. McCamon, and his fellow ex-license commissioners, of West Hastings be tendered a vote of thanks and a red plush album apiece, as a slight token of esteem for their sacrificing work while in office. The albums might each contain a picture of the Old War Horse and a draft of the celebrated apology. Carried unanimously.

The fair ladies who control the booth for "useful and fancy articles," at the Hospital entertainment in the City Hall made a mistake in not having a bogus ballot-box on exhibition. It would have made a great hit.

Ald. Gordon's suggestion re the bay bridge, a communication from him appearing in another column, looks to be sound, which might have been expected, coming from such a sterling business man. Every merchant of this city should take a live interest in this question, and endeavor to be present at the meeting to be held next Tuesday evening.

• • •

Now we know all about it. A Kingston paper explains that the lack of frost in the ground last fall has saved flooding this spring. As fast as the snow and ice melted the water soaked into the earth.

• • •

There are various signs of spring, but "that tired feeling" is just about the most unfailing one of all. Have you got it?

• • •

The idea has been mooted (and it seems a very good one) that arrangements might well be made to have the corner-stone of the new drill shed laid on one of the days set apart for the Old Boys' Reunion. It would be an excellent attraction. Let's hope it can be accomplished.

The cement people want more protection, and on Wednesday of last week a large and influential deputation waited on the Finance Minister at Ottawa in the interests of their business. Almost all the manufacturers of cement in Canada were represented. The case was very strongly put in the form of a petition showing the critical state of the industry owing to the keen foreign competition. The amount of capital invested was put at $8,000,000, of which 75 per cent. was said to be in immediate danger of being lost if immediate help was not forthcoming. The request was for 5 cents more duty per hundred pounds, or 17 1-7 cents per barrel. The case was urged by several speakers, and the Minister promised the usual consideration. When one takes into consideration the case of Hamilton, which recently bought cement from a Yankee company, the same having undersold Canadian companies, panies, the request looks like a reasonable one. Protection for home industries is the policy which will build up Canada.

Here's a story from Peterboro which shows that prohibition is needed in Jim Stratton's town. The Review says: A good story is told about a family in the south end which made home-made wine from currants some time ago. The currants were afterwards thrown out in the yard and the hens ate them. They became dizzy and finally collapsed. The woman thought the fowl had been poisoned and picked some of the feathers off the inebriated birds, and threw the bodies out. Next morning she was surprised to find that they had all come to life and were scratching in the yard, minus some of their feathers, but apparently none the worse for their carousal and their consumption of the currants.

It becomes more evident every day that the approaching Old Boys' Reunion in this city will be the biggest thing of the kind ever attempted in Belleville. The old city will be a pretty lively place next July.

HAS TO WORK FOR LIVING.

SON OF CORNELL'S PRESIDENT IN A BLACKSMITH'S SHOP.

Ithaca, March 28.—Wielding a heavy sledge in the blacksmith shops of the Groton Bridge Company, Groton, and scouring irons which are newly brought from the moulds, Robert Schurman, Cornell, '06, son of President Jacob Gould Schurman of the university, is working side by side with the other employees of the shop to earn a living.

The young man's troubles commenced when he entered upon his course at Cornell. He found difficulty in devoting his time to books, and was decidedly averse to "digging." His scholarship dropped accordingly and he found trouble in passing his examinations.

His sophomore year found him more averse to wrestle with his studies. Refusing at first to heed the counsel and finally the orders of his father, he found himself hopelessly stranded in his work at the end of the first term and no helping hand was extended to guide him past the troublesome examination week.

President Schurman then determined to make an example of his own son, and young Schurman was forthwith expelled from the university and told to earn his own living.

According to his own statement to his fellow-workmen, young Schurman wandered around the country for a short time and then applied for a job at the Groton Bridge Company's works. He was inexperienced in every line of the work, but when he was told he could begin at the bottom of the ladder the need of money was so great that he gladly accepted the job at 75 cents a day.

GIFT TO BRITISH NAVY.

DAUGHTERS OF EMPIRE PETITION GOVERNMENT TO PRESENT BATTLESHIP.

The Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire have forwarded a petition to the Dominion Parliament setting forth that, together with some form of inter-Imperial preferential trade, it would be in the interests of Canada, and in accordance with the feeling and aspirations of the Canadian people, that the Government of Canada should in some way contribute towards the expense of Imperial responsibilities.

It is held that Canada should follow the example of Australia, New Zealand, Cape Colony and Natal, and contribute to Imperial defence. The action of the Government in assuming the defence of their own territory in the harbors of Halifax and Esquimalt is approved, although it is pointed out that this is only in the nature of a man defending his own household, and is no more than is already performed by India or Australia.

The petitions pray that funds be provided forthwith sufficient to build a battleship, and that the same be presented, fully armed and equipped, to the Imperial navy, and, further, that a battleship or similar gift to Imperial defence be contributed in every period of five years, the ships to bear Canadian names.

Cured Forty Consumptives

The Post-Graduate Hospital of New York reports that more than forty cases of consumption were cured by that institution alone during the year 1904. Many of these cases were treated at the homes of the patients. This proves conclusively that consumption can be cured and cured at home. Not every one can go to Colorado or spend weeks or months in a hospital, neither of which is necessary, but everybody can get Scott's Emulsion, and that IS necessary. It has been proved that pure, fresh air, light exercise, nourishing food and will come pretty near curing any case of consumption if there is anything to build on. Thousands of people have been restored to health by Scott's Emulsion alone. The advantages of Scott's Emulsion over the plain oil are shown in the ease with which Scott's Emulsion is accepted and retained by the stomach; the quickness with which it passes into the system; its almost immediate benefit to the affected organs, and its absolute uniformity of quality and purity.

A STRIKING INCIDENT IN THE GREAT WELSH REVIVAL

WEIRD BAPTISMAL SERVICE IN ICY WATERS — GREAT FERVOR SHOWN BY ALL.

Hidden away in the valley of the Dee, in the heart of that wild, rugged country, sacred to every Welshman as the scene of Owen Glydwr's last struggle for freedom, some eight miles from Llangollen, lies the little Merioneth hamlet of Carrog. Just a few grey slat-roofed cottages are grouped on the hillside, and in the centre a tiny Baptist chapel. Always a centre of religious life since the revival it has become a spot where the fervor of conversion cannot be satisfied save by the sacrament of baptism--not received in any man-made font, but in the flowing water of the river, and underneath the open sky.

A recent Sunday was a great day in Carrog for the baptism of Merioneth converts. The little square chapel, with its pain deal pews, its whitewashed walls, its unrelieved bareness and uncompromising ugliness—had a crowded congregation. The pulpit was occupied by a young man, the Rev. W. B. Jones, of Penycae, who has already made many converts and performed many baptisms. He began his address quietly and soberly but gradually his fervor increased and he raised his voice till it rang through the chapel, as he called on all to serve Christ, to take a commission under this great Commander, and to look to the Bible for their marching orders.

"Repent and be baptized!" he cried, like John the Baptist of old. "Repentance and baptism go together, and cannot be separated. Of what use are the godfathers and godmothers? You cannot serve Christ by proxy."

His words poured forth in a fiery stream, and the fervor with which he inspired his listeners rang out as they raised their voices in an old Welsh hymn with a tender, oft-reiterated chorus, "Oh! the name of Christ,"—now raising loud, now falling to a gentle murmur, like the sound of waves on the seashore.

Then, at a given signal, the whole congregation rose and streamed in procession from the chapel. Along the winding street it passed, across the old stone bridge, and down a grassy bank to the riverside. It was a startling change of scene from the bare, ugly little chapel, built by men who feared, it would seem, to suggest even the possibility of beauty in their handiwork, to one of Nature's cathedrals where earth and sky alike declare the glory of the Lord.

The morning had been one of heavy and continuous rain, and the sky was still grey with clouds, though here and there light breaking through, gave promise of a fairer evening. Through the arches of the old stone bridge, the river Dee came tumbling wuth a pleasant, rippling sound over a hidden shelf of sunken stone. Then it widened out into a quiet pool, and passed on between its grassy bank like a ribbon of silver.

Close up on either side rose wooded hills, the bare branches of the trees like delicate filigree against the sky, while in the background the bleak hills of the Berwyn range cut sharp and dark against the horizon. Surely a spot where, in the words of the Psalmist, men would ever "lift up their eyes unto the hills from whence cometh their help."

The bridge was thronged with an eager, curious crowd that had gathered from neighboring towns and villages, but the congregation made its way past them, and down to the riverside, and grouped itself where a little stretch of shingle beach put out into the stream. All types and all ages were represented in that gathering, from white-haired, white-bearded village patriarchs, to toddling children, who, holding tightly to their mother's skirts, watched the strange service with wide open, innocent eyes, full of wonder.

But men were in the majority—the young men, and men in the prime of life, with faces tanned by sun and rain, fresh with the freshness of open air life. It was they who furnished the group of converts ready for baptism. In front of the congregation the minister advanced to the brink of the stream, and, standing there, read in soft, musical Welsh the chapter in the Acts of the Apostles which tells the story of Philip and the man of Ethiopia.

Then followed a solemn pause.

Like Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch, so "they went both down into the water and he baptised him." There was no hesitation or shrinking from the ordeal, though the grey water, fresh from the mountains, was but some 12 degrees above freezing in temperature. Minister and convert, hand in hand, entered the stream, and walked calmly out till they were waist deep. Then the minister uttering the solemn words of baptism in the name of the Trinity, plunged the convert beneath the water for a moment, while on the bank the people joined their voices in sweetest harmony in the "Diolch Iddo," or "Thanks be to God."

Any feeling of the extravagance of maintaining in an ice-cold mountain stream a custom suited only to the Oriental heat seemed to pass away in that little crowd. Convert after convert passed in turn into the water. All were men, and were in their Sunday best. When all the converts had been baptised, the minister, standing knee-deep in the river, appealed in stirring tones to the crowd on the bridge to take the salvation at hand. No one, however, responded, but there was prayer and a final hymn before the converts and the congregation dispersed.

For what could it matter to such men to stand in wet clothes in a bitter wind? "Have but faith," says the minister; "all must go well. It is the grace of Christ, and the man who accepts it in faith will be the stronger after, even in health. It needs be baptized in chapels and have the water warmed."

So the strange primitive service ended, incredible yet real, full of meaning and significance to those who took part in it; and as they scattered to their homes, a rift of blue broke through the cloud, and the crests of the hills were touched with golden light.

SECOND MATE'S YARN OF WEIRD SEA SNAKE.

BARK TROOP BROUGHT AN AMAZING CARGO ACCORDING TO THE NEW YORK SUN.

What the crew of the bark Howard D. Troop saw just south of the equator on February 4 may never be known. The big four-master flying the British ensign from her jigger, anchored of Clifton, Staten Island, at noon yesterday after a voyage of 138 days from Kobe, Japan. The captain, D. W. Corning, who lives in Manhattan, went ashore in the doctor's boat and fled for home, stopping only to say something or other about that which was sixty feet long and had a seagull perched on its back. He left the first officer, J. W. Grant, in command of the bark, which lay yesterday afternoon in a perfect calm, surrounded by a haze of romance.

Bearded Scandinavians polished the ice scuppers. Lively little Japs scoured the unported helm. Enquirers as to what was seen below the equator came aboard at the peril of their lives, for the Troop sat so high in the water that she showed two feet of red belly band and boarders had to jump for the ladder.

"That's on account of our cargo," said the second mate. "We're loaded with Japanese matting, dolls and paper lanterns. We wouldn't ride much higher if we had the hold full of inflated balloons."

"But the sea serpent?" he was asked.

"It was in latitude 13 south, longitude 14 east," he began, as one would sing a song. "We were running along with all the canvas spread, for the wind was light, when some of the crew descried this creature, whom I hesitate to describe. Judging by the size of the ship, it must have been ten fathoms long."

"With a long beard," interjected the bos'n.

"I will not commit myself to that detail," said the second mate. "Neither do I consider it essential to the narrative. Suffice to say that the sight was at once interesting and impressive."

"He bane dead long time," remarked Ole Hansen, the helmsman bold.

"He means the snake, not me," said the mate, apologetically. "At the same time, whether or not the creature had given up the ghost is a moot question. My personal belief is that it was alive, but dormant, and ready to devour intruders. It's color was light grey, which, as I understand, is the spring fashion with mottles."

"Tried eat vessel," remarked the Japanese steward in a tone of one who tries to give information without exciting.

"Not exactly that," corrected the second mate. "It cannot be said that such was the reptile's attitude toward us. It did not threaten, but seemed waiting for an attack. We were quite conciliatory."

"I passed it down a pint of beer," said the bos'n, "which it drank with evident relish."

"Mr. Googin sometimes exaggerates," explained the second mate, "but I will admit that the serpent looked as though it was in need of nourishment."

"What is there to be said concerning the attendant sea gull?" was enquired.

"Birds build nest on top snake," said the ever obliging steward.

"Tut, tut," cried the second mate. "Careful witnesses report that the gull had dug a hole in the serpent's back and it may have intended there to construct its home and rear its young. Such things, however, are mere deduction. If the gull did as has been stated then instinct must have shown it that the serpent was a creature which never leaves the surface of the water.

"No, it had no horns that we could see, but its ears were extraordinarily long and were covered with pink fur of the finest texture. Its back, which was remarkably broad and covered with scales which resembled nickel, glistened beneath the fierce sun of the tropics."

"Its tail?" (This breathlessly.)

"Undulated," said the mate," and when I recall that fact I must dismiss the suspicion of our Scandinavian friend that the beast was dead. The tail gently but firmly undulated."

"Did it lash the sea into a fury?"

"Much as I would like to recount that it did," said the mate sadly, "I cannot diverge one iota from the truth. The sea was like oil and only the most gentle ripples were in the wake of the object of our attention. We sailed away from it with much regret, and as we dipped our colors in recognition of its great size and dignity it responded with three distinct nods of its horrid head."

Worry Goes to the Stomach.

TEARS DOWN THE LITTLE TELEGRAPH LINES THAT OPERATE THE DIGESTIVE PROCESSES.

How to Repair These Telegraph Lines.

I Will Gladly Give any Stomach Sufferer a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy Free to Try.

I ask no deposit—no reference—no security. There is nothing to risk—nothing to pay, either now or later. Any stomach sufferer who does not know my remedy may have a full dollar's worth free, if he merely writes and asks.

I willingly make this liberal offer because Dr. Shoop's Restorative is not an ordinary stomach remedy. It does not, indeed, treat the stomach itself. It goes beyond—it treats the nerves that control and operate the stomach. The nerves that wear out and break down and cause stomach trouble. For stomach trouble is really only a symptom that there is serious nerve trouble inside. That is why ordinary remedies fail. That is why my remedy succeeds. That is why I can afford to make this offer.

Yet do not misunderstand me when I say "nerves." I do not mean the nerves you ordinarily think about. I mean the automatic stomach nerves, over which your mind has no control. I have not the space here to explain to you how the nerves control the stomach, or how they may be vitalized and restored. When you write I will send you a book which will make these points clear. But this much is certain—ailing nerves cause all forms of stomach trouble—indigestion, belching, heartburn, insomnia, nervousness, dyspepsia. No stomach medicine will cure these ailments. Only nerve treatment will do that. No other remedy than Dr. Shoop's Restorative even claims to reach these nerves.

What ails the stomach nerves? Worry, probably. Mental anguish destroys their tiny fibres and tears down the telegraph lines without which the stomach has no more self-control than a sponge. Overwork will do it. Irregular habits will do it. Overeating will do it. Dissipation will do it. But the effect is the same stomach failure.

No matter how these nerves became impaired—I know a way to rebuild their strength — to restore their vigor. It is a remedy which took thirty years of my life to perfect—a remedy which is now known in more than fifty thousand communities—in more than a million homes—as Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

If you have stomach trouble and have never tried my remedy, merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized bottle of my prescription, and he will send the bill to me. This offer is made only to strangers to my remedy. Those who have once used the Restorative do not need this evidence. There are no conditions—no requirements. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

DUTIES OF CANADIANS.

High National Ideals Should Be Placed Before the Narrow Aims of Self-Interest—Personal Exploitation.

The address of Mr. Byron E. Walker of Toronto, to the Canada Club of Ottawa the other day upon the duties of Canadians to Canada was an inspiration to the two hundred members, chiefly stalwart young men, sons of the soil, to place high national ideals before the narrow and selfish aims of self-interest. Mr. Walker rejoiced at the rapid growth in recent years of the feeling of solidarity among the Canadian people. One of the greatest evils Canada has had to contend with was lack of confidence. Mr. Walker drew a gratifying picture of the natural resources which Canadians have inherited, and which are calculated to make Canada the proudest nation in the world.

The fathers of confederation had only been able to accomplish their design of linking the scattered units of Canada together because of their patriotism and intense belief in the future. Every young Canadian owned it as a duty to his country to study her history and the record of the struggles through which she has arrived at her present position. The industrial problem was the first which presented itself for consideration, and under this heading Mr. Walker, while extolling industry in the development of the national resources of the soil, the forest, the mine and the seas, lakes and rivers, uttered a note of warning against the industrialism, the love of money, which threatened to outweigh the higher and nobler sentiment of patriotism. The political conditions of the present day and of the future under a democracy would be just what the average intelligence and the average morality of the country were, and it would be time enough to expect a higher standard of public morality when the average of the individual citizen has been elevated. No sincere, sober, thoughtful citizen of the United States is really satisfied with what the democracy has done for his nation. Experience has proved that per se there is no virtue in democracy itself. We do not want Government in Canada to drift into a condition like that in the United States. If we wish to prevent that, what we have to do is to increase so far as we can those elements in Canadian life that are different to the elements which are to be found in the United States. Mr. Walker pointed out the danger that the Government of the country might become a huge oligarchy, as the Government of the United States sometimes threatens to become.

The anxiety of some people to get in the personal and social column of the press he regarded as a shocking and horrid attempt to exploit themselves, which was in as bad taste as it could possibly be. It was debasing and vulgarizing. Our educational system, of which we are so proud, also had the defects which appeared to be inherent in and inseparable from democracy. The individual expected the State not only to educate his children, but was very pleased to have the State do as much as possible for him for nothing, and although the State does not yet do so, it was apparently expected that before very long the State would be required to assume the responsibility of the dentistry of children's teeth and the examination of their eyes.

In Toronto he did not know yet that plumbing and carpentering were taught, but he had no doubt in the end the demand would be that every child be taught to earn his own living. To his mind that was as false an idea of education as a country could well have. He had no intention of quarrelling with technical schools, believing in their desirability as a superstructure, and in night schools, where those who could not pay for technical instruction could obtain it free. He did not believe in a system of education which does not teach the children how to speak the English language with reasonable accuracy, and to walk about and deport themselves as gentlemen, and to think and exercise powers of reflection. After all, character and the power to think are the great objects of education. "We cannot make men fit to govern a nation, we cannot make patriotic, thoughtful citizens and a moral people simply by technical education," said Mr. Walker.

"We are to succeed industrially, but are we to be a cultured people?" asked Mr. Walker in reaching the final and finest portion of his address. "We are to be rich, are we to be wise? We shall perhaps be eventually among the first in commerce—shall we be among the first in arts and letters? Unless we attain that distinction, he added, we shall not succeed. We are to be a powerful nation—shall we be a just nation? Are we to develop to be what Great Britain now is, the only nation in the world that can be trusted to govern subject peoples justly? We are to be a democracy—will that be a guarantee of freedom, or a mere oligarchy?" He was not a pessimist, Mr. Walker declared, but an optimist; a business man to succeed must be an optimist. But optimism must be ballasted with common-sense. The wise optimist expects trouble, looks upon all trouble as mere detail, but plans to meet trouble. "I am so proud of my country and so confident of my countrymen, I look for the best results. But my ideal of what we should eventually become is so high that all conditions which deter instead of aiding our true progress are irritating. We are just beginning to be on trial before the other nations of the world," Mr. Walker said, in conclusion. "It may be easy to do better than most of them have done—but we should do better than the best. Let us, then, be humble in our time of probation, not vain. We cannot become a great nation without developing national character with decided moral greatness. There is enough wrong in our country already to make us anything but vain of our stewardship thus far."

BUFFALO NEW YORK

WHICH DO YOU PREFER—

Bag-kneed, lob-sided, ill-fitting trousers, or the kind that look as if they were made by a tailor who knew his business?

Our tailors know how, and they add common sense to their ability.

It is this combination that enables us to make the most perfect-fitting trousers. Men who wear ours always look dressed.

If your dealer does not keep them, send us a postal card and we will tell you where you can get them. They all have our name.

MURTON WAS IN TROUBLE.

Was Wanted in Berlin on a Charge of Fraud.

Toronto, March 30.—Coroner Orr yesterday held an inquest on Arthur W. Murton, whose body was found near the railroad tracks at High Park on Tuesday morning. As there was no evidence to show how the fatality occurred, and nothing to indicate foul play, the jury brought in a verdict of accidental death.

There is no doubt that deceased was in a worried state of mind, and was in financial difficulties of some kind, as the following Berlin despatch shows: "A. W. Murton was wanted here by High Constable Huber on a charge of obtaining $100 under false pretences from Jacob Hespeler, manager of the Molsons Bank at Waterloo. A warrant for his arrest had been issued, and the authorities at Guelph, Toronto and other points notified."

BRIDGES IN DANGER.

Big Hole Torn in Dam at Hespeler—A Sawmill Burned.

Guelph, March 30.—R. Harwood's sawmill near Speedside was burned out on Monday night and a large quantity of lumber in the yard was destroyed. The loss will be over $2,000. No insurance.

Wm. A. Kribs, ex-M. P. P., Hespeler, was in the city yesterday. He states that the ice above the dam of the Canadian woollen mills went off Tuesday night and tore out a hole in the stone work thirty feet wide and twelve feet high within a couple of feet of the dam, which is fourteen feet high. There are fears that the dam will break. If it does some ten bridges between there and Galt will likely be swept from the Speed into the Grand River.

"PARISIAN" WAS NOT MOVING.

When Crash Occurred, So Witnesses Say—Enquiry Has Begun.

Halifax, March 30.—The preliminary investigation into the Parisian-Albano collision commenced Tuesday. Four witnesses were called—Capt. Johnston, First Officer Collins, Third Officer Griffiths and Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick, of Cambridge University. The gist of the evidence was that the ship was at a standstill at the time of the collision.

The condition of the Parisian is unchanged, except that she has become slightly bogged. The agent of the German steamer libelled her yesterday for $60,000.

The hull of the Allan boat has been made tight and the pumps will be started towards morning.

Pleads Guilty.

BRITISH OFFICER IN SCANDAL.

Capt. Salmon and a Doctor Accused by Capt. Spain, of Ottawa.

New York, March 30.—Capt. O. G. V. Spain, of the British navy, stationed as a harbor wrecker at Ottawa, Canada, appeared in the Jefferson Market Court, yesterday afternoon as complainant against Capt. Reginald Salmon, a captain in the British army, who is charged jointly with Dr. Andrew Fulton, of No. 370 Fiftieth street, Brooklyn, with causing the serious illness of the wife of Capt. Spain two weeks ago.

It is alleged that Capt. Salmon and Mrs. Spain left Canada at the same time and that Capt. Spain learned through his fifteen year old son, who corresponded with his mother, that the latter was in this city.

Capt. Salmon and Dr. Fulton were arrested yesterday morning where Capt. Salmon lived for some time, and where, it was said, he was known as Capt. Spain. Mrs. Spain was in court. Both prisoners were held in $2,000 bail for a further examination to-day.

45,000 Miners to Quit.

Altoona, Pa., March 30.—The operators and miners of the Central Bituminous District of Pennsylvania, after being in conference here almost continuously since March 16, endeavoring to agree upon a wage scale to go into effect on April 1, adjourned finally yesterday without coming to an agreement. The failure to agree means a suspension of work by the 45,000 organized miners of the district at the end of the present month.

Invites Nations of Earth.

Washington, March 30.—President Roosevelt last night issued a proclamation inviting the nations of the earth to be represented by their military organizations and naval vessels at the celebration of the birth of the American nation to be held in the vicinity of Jamestown, Virginia, from May 13 until November, 1907.

New York, March 30.—Thirty-two cases of cerebro-spinal meningitis have been reported during one day in the borough of Greater New York. Several cases are also reported at Passaic, N. J., where one of the public schools will be closed, two deaths having already resulted among the pupils. The death rate in well defined cases amounts to more than 70 per cent.

Natives Kill Eleven Germans.

A Medicine Chest in Itself.— Only the well-to-do can afford to possess a medicine chest, but Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, which is a medicine chest in itself, being a remedy for rheumatism, lumbago, sore throat, colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma and a potent healer for wounds, cuts, bruises, sprains, etc., is within the reach of the poorest, owing to its cheapness. It should be in every house.

Opportunity makes some men, while other men make opportunity.

A Carefully Prepared Pill. — Much time and attention were expended in the experimenting with the ingredients that enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills before they were brought to the stage in which they were first offered to the public. Whatever other pills may be, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of much expert study, and all persons suffering from dyspepsia or disordered liver and kidneys may confidently accept them as being what they are represented to be.

One needs a good memory in order to be a circumspect forgetter.

A Successful Medicine.— Everyone wishes to be successful in any undertaking in which he may engage. It is, therefore, extremely gratifying to the proprietors of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to know that their efforts to compound a medicine which would prove a blessing to mankind have been successful beyond their expectations. The endorsation of these pills by the public is a guarantee that a pill has been produced which will fulfil everything claimed for it.

Some men are so fortunate that they wouldn't know good luck if they should chance to meet it.

The greater the irritation in the throat the more distressing the cough becomes. Coughing is the effort of Nature to expel this irritating substance from the air passages. Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will heal the inflamed parts, which exude mucous, and restore them to a healthy state, the cough disappearing under the curative effects of the medicine. It is pleasant to the taste, and the price, 25 cents, is within the reach of all.

Some girls seem to think more of a man who can buy a diamond ring than they do of one who can pay a grocery bill.

The healthy glow disappearing from the cheek and moaning and restlessness at night are sure symptoms of worms in children. Do not fail to get a bottle of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator; it is an effectual medicine.

Many a man might go through the world with a reputation for sagacity if it were not for his habit of talking.

Are your corns harder to remove than those that others have had? Have they not had the same kind? Have they not been cured by using Holloway's Corn Cure? Try a bottle.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

closed his eyes. As he did so he heard in the intense, horrible silence, the turning of a key. "It comes too late," he thought; "I shall be de trop no longer!" But the sound was followed by a draught of fresh, of heavenly air; but he was too faint to move, and he was only conscious of the figure of a woman dimly outlined in the dense fumes. She stood for a moment looking round, then noiselessly she sprang towards him. As she did so the garden door by which she had entered closed. She sprang from him to the rope, saw that it was broken, and, staggering, made for the garden door. By the time she had opened it Vane had recovered sufficiently to get to his feet and heavily, blunderingly, was moving towards her, when, as if she had suddenly thought of something, she ran to the furnace and, taking off the iron pot, poured out its contents. There should be no evidence against her beloved master. But her hand was unsteady, her whole frame, indeed, shaking, and some of the liquid fell into the furnace. The flame arose, piercing even the dim fumes, and lighting the room with a livid glare in which Vane saw her face and recognized Deborah. He saw something else that roused his bewildered senses with a quick horror; the flame had caught her dress, and she was on fire. Struggling fiercely with his weakness, he tore off his coat and wrapping it round her, essayed to drag her to the door. As he did so the burning liquid ran like a snake from the furnace and along the floor, caught the curtain, and in another moment the whole room seemed ablaze.

Vane struggled to the garden door, still grasping the inert figure. The silence, hers caused by her terrible affliction, his from the fumes that filled his lungs, was weird and ghastly. They were like two demoniac figures struggling through a nightmare of hell. Swaying this way and that, Vane reached the door at last. It was ajar, and he forced it with his weak, uncertain fingers, but even as he stood on the threshold his strength failed him, and as he fell outwards, his burden slipped from him, the door closed on its spring, and she was shut up in the burning room.

Vane fell down the steps heavily, and, rolling under one of the thick bushes, lay there senseless

Letchford, still waiting for Vane, was knocking the ashes from his pipe when he saw a shaft of yellow light shoot across the opening between the curtains. He thought nothing of it for a moment or two, but as it grew more intense he drew the curtain aside and saw that the light came from some part of the house. His impulse was to open the window, but he remembered that a draught was, in cases of fire, an added peril, and he sprang to the door shouting for help. In an instant, as it seemed, the stairs were filled with people, the hall itself, while his shouts were joined by screams and cries of "Fire!"

Springing from the corridor leading to the Witch's Room came the tall figure of Julian. "Where? Where? he cried.

Letchford gasped his answer. "I saw it from the smoking-room; it is on the west side!"

"It must be in your room, Mr. Julian," said Prance.

A cry, a sharp cry of horror, rose from the group of women. It came from Judith.

Julian's eyes went towards her and held hers for a moment, and she shrank and covered her face with her hands as if to shut out his gaze.

"We shall soon see!" he said, as he ran down the corridor so swiftly that before the rest could reach him he had unlocked the door and flung the key into the room.

Before the dense volume of smoke and the sheets of flame which, like a demon spirit rejoicing in the evil that it has done, poured out to meet them, the terrified throng fell back. It was Letchford who sprang forward, his arm across his face.

"Vane! Vane was in here! My God!" he cried. "Water! Water! No, no! Don't open the windows! The room is closed. Vane, oh, poor Vane!"

There was, of course, a "perfect system of appliances for meeting cases of fire" at Lesborough, and, equally of course, the perfect system broke down. Before the elaborate hose could be uncoiled and the water turned on and directed upon the burning room, it had been reduced to ashes; the other part of the wing was in flames, and the remainder of the building threatened. But every man worked with the energy of madness, and the women, too, bore their part. With Lady Fanworthy at their head they filled the buckets which the men passed from hand to hand.

It was over an hour before the flames were mastered, and the house saved; then, though the smoke and steam were well nigh blinding, Letchford, followed by Julian, sprang and stumbled amidst the ruins and began their search

Julian worked like a man possessed, tearing at the blocks of stone, the charred beams, the thick debris which hid the floor.

"He may have left the room!" he gasped, pausing for a moment, and wiping the sweat from his blackened face.

"God grant it!" gasped Letchford; then his voice broke with a groan and he staggered back with something gripped in his hand.

"What—what is it?" gasped Julian, and his question was echoed by the rest.

"Send—send the women away!" panted Letchford. "For God's sake send them away!"

They fell back, all but Lady Fanworthy and Lady Letchford. The men closed round her husband, then fell back also. In his hand he held the charred fragment of the thick smoking-jacket from which gleamed through the smoke the big brass buttons.

"Oh, my God! Vane is dead!" cried Letchford.

Julian stood staring at it speechlessly for a moment; then he moved his head slowly. One of the women had come forward and was standing looking at him.

It was Judith Orme. Their eyes met for an instant, then she uttered a terrible cry and fell back in a swoon.

One does not recover from the deadly fumes of aconite, ammonia and other deadly chemicals very quickly. Vane lay unconscious beneath the sheltering bush until nearly the moment the flames were extinguished, and his senses came back so slowly that for some time he was incapable of any desire for life. At last he raised his head, gazed vaguely at the dense volume of smoke and steam in an uninterested fashion, and, still dazed, crawled weakly to a safer position. He lay there for some minutes, panting for breath and fighting for strength; then he rose to his feet with the intention of going to the assistance of the others; but suddenly he heard his name spoken. He stopped and put his hand to his head. What had happened? Why, yes, of course, he had been in that room, had been nearly burned. Nearly? At that moment Letchford's cry arose, "Vane is dead!" and pierced the thick air.

Vane stood quite still while one could count twenty; then, obeying an impulse that came as swiftly as a flash of lightning, he drew back into the shadow of the shrubbery.

He remained there for a moment, trying to think clearly, consecutively, then he passed through the other door of the ladies' garden and, keeping in the shadow of the wall, reached the common room of the stablemen.

It was empty—every one was gathered round the scene of the fire—and Vane, still striving for an effort at thought and resolution, took one of the jackets and caps which lay on the table, put them on, and, going through the yard, made his way towards the park.

CHAPTER XXII.

After Nina had gone Sutcombe stood and stared at the sea and faced the music like a man—and a gentleman.

Decima had refused him: it was a bitter, hard blow. And yet, notwithstanding her entreaty that he would forget his proposal, was there no hope left for him? From her reiteration "You don't know, you don't know!" he inferred a mystery, a secret; and yet not much of a mystery, a secret, for what else could she mean but that she loved and was pledged to another man?

Anyway, by the explanation of her words, her almost anguished manner, what it might, he, Sutcombe, had to accept her refusal. In common courtesy he must refrain from pressing his suit while they three were alone on this desolate island and she was unable to keep out of his reach.

So he went back to his bed in the "saloon," unhappy and unsatisfied, but not altogether despairing; for, if she was pledged to another man, where was he, and why had he not put in an appearance all these months?

He rose in the morning, and, filling the role which Mannering had so ably played, got some fuel, lit the fire, and went out with the gun to shoot some wild fowl.

When he came back he found the breakfast ready and the two girls awaiting him.

Nina glanced at him half timidly, but Sutcombe was not the man to whine or wear the willow, and he met her glance cheerfully and reassuringly; indeed, he was so cheerful that Vivienne, notwithstanding her acuteness, did not guess that he had asked his question and been rejected. Immediately after breakfast he set off with pick and shovel to the spot to which Nina directed him, the ladies promising to follow him directly they had "cleared away." Sutcombe walked by no means quickly, for what his heart desired was love and not gold; but after he had taken off his coat and been at work for some minutes, he was seized by a mild attack of the "yellow fever," and began to work with that enthusiasm which the gold-seeker alone experience; so that when the two girls came slowly toward him, Vivienne supported by Nina's strong arm, they found him hot but exultant.

"You are quite right!" he said, pointing to the specks of yellow which shone dully amongst the heap of dirt and rock. "I'm not much of an authority, but even I can see that there is a large quantity of gold here!"

Nina nodded and caught something of his enthusiasm.

"I'll help you!" she said, brightly. "Oh, yes, give me the spade. I know how to handle it. I used—" She stopped suddenly, and Vivienne, who was seated in the shade of the rock, cut in eagerly:

"Why can't I help!"

"So you can!" said Sutcombe; "you shall sort out the pieces with the gold in them."

Having thus made a division of the labor, they worked almost in silence until Sutcombe and Nina had made a large heap and Vivienne a smaller but more valuable and precious one. Every now and then Sutcombe paused to wipe the sweat from his face—and glance at Nina; and he saw plainly enough that though she was working hard—far too hard for his taste—she was not thinking of the gold; and once he saw her look round toward the sea and heard her sigh as if her mind were dwelling on the past; and as he stole glances at her sad eyes and heard the sigh she tried to repress, a wave of bitterness rose within him and he felt, not for the first time since last night, a resentment against the unknown man, the memory of whom was disturbing her peace and causing her unhappiness. But he worked on and said nothing; there was nothing for him to do but possess his soul in patience.

Stopping only for meals, they had by dusk, when Sutcombe insisted upon a halt, collected a good quantity of the gold-bearing quartz; but as he and the girls bent over it, a difficulty presented itself to his mind.

"How are we going to get this away?" he asked, thoughtfully.

"Pack it in boxes!" replied Vivienne, triumphantly; but Nina saw what was passing in his mind and shook her head.

"There would not be boxes enough," she said.

"And we could not get it away without taking the men into our confidence," said Sutcombe; "and though they are good fellows, well— Is there any man who could resist the temptation to desert and make for this Golden Isle? Of course, what we want is a mill to stamp, crush the quartz—"

"But not having it, we must get the gold itself," said Nina. "My father spoke of finding some in layers—placers, I think he called it; and he said it was in the valley, south by southeast. He said"—her voice shook a little as she recalled the scene—"that it was quite easy to get."

"I'll go there to-morrow," said Sutcombe. "I will go alone, for it will be too far for Vivienne, and, besides, Decima—Miss Wood"—he faltered, and Vivienne looked from one to the other as he stumbled over the names. "I think you ought to rest. I don't like your working as you have done to-day."

Nina shook her head. "It has not hurt me; it has helped me," she said, quickly. "But we will stay at home and keep house to-morrow, if you wish it," she added, meekly.

That night when the two girls were undressing Vivienne laid her hand on Nina's arm with gentle deprecation and whispered:

"Has he spoken, Decima?"

Nina's silence was answer enough.

"And—and is it of no use, dear?"

Nina shook her head and fought with the tears that rose to her eyes.

"No," she said, almost inaudibly. "I am so sorry! Ah, how cold the words sound; and what would I not give if—if I could have said 'yes'! Lady Vivienne, your brother is the best, the most unselfish—"

She stopped suddenly, for the words recalled those Fleming had used when he was speaking of Vane Mannering. Her face went crimson, then paler than before.

"There is some one else, dear?" whispered Vivienne. "Oh, poor Sutcombe!"

"Oh, poor me!" sprang from Nina's lips with mingled sadness and bitterness.

Vivienne looked at her. "Was it—was it some one in the ship that was lost, some one who was here on the island? Oh, don't think me curious, dear. I am wondering if I can help you. It is not possible?"

Nina shook her head. "No, no one can help me," she said. Then suddenly the craving for the sympathy of this sweet friend of hers melted her into partial confidence.

"We were thrown together—linked by Fate—but—but he did not care for me. There—there was some one else—" She stopped and turned her face away, calling to her pride to burn up her tears.

An Improvement on Nature.
Nature gives us fruit to keep us healthy. But fruit can't bring back health after we lose it. It take something more effective than fresh fruit to cure Stomach, Liver and Kidney Diseases.

The clasp of Vivienne's hand became a caress.

"And you, dear—you cannot forget! You love him still, though you are parted—"

Nina's head drooped and Vivienne was answered. She thought of her brother.

"May I tell Sutcombe?" she said in a low voice.

"Yes," said Nina; "please tell him. I—I want him to understand that—that what he wishes can never be, that I am bound—"

"Bound?" echoed Vivienne in surprise; but Nina, remembering her promise, would say no more.

The next morning Vivienne gave Sutcombe Nina's message.

He nodded almost savagely. "I understand," he said. "The man, whoever he is, has broken her heart. And it is my fate to have to stand by and look on—helpless! Some day"—he paused—"some day I may have the luck to meet him. If so—"

"You will remember that she—she loves him still!" Vivienne put in with gentle earnestness.

He went off moodily to the valley. At his return at nightfall he brought with him a bag full of small nuggets and dust, and reported that, as Dr. Wood had said, large quantities of gold were there in placers in the rock and soil, and plenty of dust in the bed of the stream.

"We'll go with you to-morrow," said Nina; but he would not hear of it.

"It is too far," he said; "besides, one man can get all we shall be able to take on this trip without the knowledge of the men."

He was not altogether disinterested in his objection to their company, for the poor fellow was rather glad to be alone with his disappointment. The proximity of the woman one loves but cannot win is at times a torture well nigh intolerable. So Sutcombe went up again to the valley, there to fight, as best he could, the great disappointment of his life.

It was a lovely valley and as solitary as it was beautiful. There was no sound besides that of Sutcombe's pick and spade and the rattle of the rock and stones as they fell beneath his strokes. Now and again a bird flew high up in the sky or whirled close above his head, its bright eyes scanning this intruder on its solitude with a curiosity in which fear had no share, and a lizard crawled out of its cranny to blink at him.

But for his thoughts and his work Sutcombe would have found the intense solitude and silence oppressive, but they soothed him with that balm which Nature holds out to those of her children who are wounded at heart.

He had been working for some hours since he had stopped to eat the lunch Nina had packed up for him in the empty gold bag, and was resolving that he would work for another half hour before he stopped for the day, and he took out his watch to see the time.

While he was looking at it he was conscious of a strange feeling, the sensation which comes to us when we feel a presence that we have neither heard nor seen. Oppressed by this curious consciousness, he looked over his shoulder and saw the figure of a man seated on a rock just above him.

The man sat, with his chin resting on his hands, his elbows upon his knees, so calmly, so absolutely like a statue, that Sutcombe was half inclined to believe himself the victim of a delusion, so much so that he straightened himself and stared speechlessly at the figure.

He saw that the man was young, but thin and somewhat haggard. He was dressed in quite a rough sea-suit, but his hands, though tanned, like his face, with the sun, and roughened by the water and the wind, were those of a gentleman. But it was the eyes and not the hands which held Sutcombe's regard, so full of half cynical, half bitter amusement were they.

Sutcombe found his voice at last.

"Hello, sir!" he said, lifting his cap.

The man raised his hat in response.

"How do you do?" he said, gravely.

"Where—where did you come from?" asked Sutcombe. "I did not see you, know you were there!"

The man jerked his head slowly toward the coast behind him.

"I landed from a fishing-yawl half an hour ago, from that side of the island."

There was silence while one could count twenty; then the newcomer said as quietly and as gravely as before:

"You are gold digging, I presume?"

"I am," replied Sutcombe.

"And you are fortunate, I see."

"I am—very," assented Sutcombe.

"I congratulate you," said the stranger, in a tone which had no trace of envy in it; indeed, it was indicative of an indifference that surprised Sutcombe. "But you would be still more fortunate if you worked further up the valley."

Sutcombe stared at him.

"You—you know the island; have you been here before?"

The faintest and grimmest of smiles shone for a moment in the other man's eyes.

"Yes, I know the island; I have been here before," he said, quietly. "Is this your first visit?"

Sutcombe nodded.

"Yes. Are you alone, sir?"

"Yes, I am quite alone." He smiled as if he read Sutcombe's fear. "You need not be afraid. I shall keep your secret. And I have no desire to share in your find. I've no use for gold."

Sutcombe looked at him with amazement.

"That's a strange statement," he said, gravely. "Most men, every man, wants money!"

"Please regard me as the exception which proves the rule," was the courteous response. "Gold is only worth what it will buy; it can buy me nothing that I desire. May I ask to whom I have the pleasure of speaking?"

"My name's Sutcombe," said Sutcombe.

The stranger nodded. "Lord Sutcombe, of Southernwood?"

"Well, yes; Southernwood was mine—I sold it."

"You can now buy it back, Lord Sutcombe, if you desire to do so," said the stranger, looking at the bag of gold. "You are a millionaire—of the English variety. My name is—Richard Mortimer," he added. "I am on a fishing and shooting expedition—a solitary one, and happened to make this island in the course of my cruise. Have you a match upon you?"

Sutcombe handed his match-box.

"May I take half a dozen? Thanks! I must be getting back to my boat." He rose and picked up the gun which had lain at his feet, and raised his wide-brimed hat. But Sutcombe put out his hand arrestingly.

"One moment, Mr. Mortimer," he said. "You know this island, and the secret of the gold. May I ask if—if any others know of it? I just want to know what to expect."

"No other living person is aware of it—but one," said Richard Mortimer, "and I do not think you have anything to fear from that person. Certainly you have nothing to fear from me. So far as I am concerned you are welcome to the island and all it contains. Good day."

"Wait!" said Sutcombe, sharply. His face had grown pale, his eyes keen and suspicious. "Do you mind telling me the name of that other person, sir?"

Mr. Richard Mortimer regarded the flushed face, the suspicious eyes, thoughtfully.

"Yes, I do mind," he replied. "I have an objection."

"It is a woman?" said Sutcombe.

Richard Mortimer's face reddened and his eyes grew darker.

"You are at liberty to guess," he said, curtly.

Sutcombe dropped the spade upon which he had been leaning and advanced a step or two toward the other man.

"The only other person who knows of this island and its wealth is a lady," he said.

"To whom you are indebted for your information—and your fortune." The retort came like a flash.

Sutcombe reddened again.

"That is true," he said, gravely. "Her name is Wood, Decima Wood. You know her?"

Richard Mortimer shook his head. "I know of no lady bearing that name," he said. Then, suddenly, his manner changed to one of suppressed eagerness. "She may have borne another. Perhaps you can describe her?"

"She has dark hair and grey eyes—they are sometimes violet. She was wrecked in the Alpina—"

A faint cry rose from Mortimer and he threw up his head as a man does when he has received a sudden shock. Sutcombe smiled bitterly.

"You appear to be startled," he said, sternly. "Shall I go too far if I suggest you know the lady, and that she has reason to regret the day she met you?" He did not need any answer. Instinctively he felt that the man who was the cause of Decima's unhappiness, who held the key to her secret, stood before him. "You also were wrecked in the Alphina. Do you deny it?"

"I assent to, I deny, nothing," said Richard Mortimer. "If—if you can give me any information respecting that lady—"

"I can and will," cut in Sutcombe. "She is well and happy"—oh, Sutcombe!—"and is guarded and watched over by friends who—who will protect her happiness by any and every means—"

The other man stood erect, his tanned face set and stern.

"I presume I may count on you as the lady's chief friend, Lord Sutcombe."

"You may," retorted Sutcombe, promptly. "And that being so, I avail myself of the privilege to tell you that, if you are the man I suspect you to be, you are a heartless scoundrel!"

Vane, otherwise Richard Mortimer, stood for a moment as if turned to stone; then he smiled.

"Lord Sutcombe, I have learned from you that the lady we both have in mind is alive. Compared with such knowledge, all else is trivial. Alive! And happy, you say? Thank God! Think me what you will. It is a matter of indifference to me. Stop! You say the—the lady is happy. Let her remain so! Do not tell her that you have met me! I am going down to my boat. In less than half an hour I shall have sailed from the island; and I give you my word that I shall never revisit it; that, in all probability, I shall never cross your, or her, path again. Good day, Lord Sutcombe!"

Sutcombe nodded acquiescingly; but he gnawed at his moustache as if in doubt.

He was an honorable man, and the falsehood he had told rankled in his bosom. He had said that Decima was well and happy, whereas she was fretting after this Richard Mortimer who had turned up in such an extraordinary fashion. Was it not his duty to bring them together? The man had been startled when he had heard that she was alive, had seemed as if he cared. The struggle raged within Sutcombe's mind for a minute or two; then he said, hoarsely:

"Stop! I—I can't let you go like this. I wish to heaven you had not come here, that we hadn't met; but we have and—I told you an untruth just now when I said Miss Wood was happy. She is not."

Vane looked at him gravely, intently.

"She is fretting over something that has happened in the past, something in which you were concerned. I think it would be as well if you were to meet her. She is here on this island."

Vane started and went white. There was silence for a full minute, then he said, hoarsely:

"It would do no good; a meeting with me would only cause the lady pain—"

"In a word," cut in Sutcombe, hotly, "you are afraid to meet her. You have behaved so badly that you shrink from facing her. It is as I suspected. You are a coward, Mr. Mortimer."

Vane's face went white, but he bit his lip and, breathing hard, restrained himself.

"Yes," he said, quietly, "I am a coward—but not quite the same kind you think me, Lord Sutcombe."

"I'm not good at making nice distinctions of that sort," retorted Sutcombe, fiercely. "A man who slinks off as you are doing is a common or garden coward who deserves horsewhipping. I've no whip, but—"

Half mad with anger and the bitterness borne of the situation, he caught up a bit of a branch of a tree which he had been using, and made to strike Vane across the face, but Vane, dropping his gun, caught Sutcombe's arm and averted the blow. Sutcombe endeavored to wrench himself from the steel-like grasp; and almost before they knew it the two men were struggling. They were equally matched in strength and skill, but the gun, which they had disregarded, played a third hand. One of the men must have stepped on the trigger, for there was a flash and report, and, half blinded, Sutcombe felt Vane's grip relax and saw him stagger back.

CHAPTER XXIII.

In an instant the madness of anger passed from Sutcombe's brain and remorsefully he supported the man whom a moment or two before he had been endeavoring to throw.

"Are you hurt?" he asked, anxiously.

Vane tried to smile and answer in the negative, but before he could do so he fainted. Sutcombe laid him down and, getting out a brandy flask, managed to get some spirit through the clenched teeth; and presently, to his immense relief, the wounded man came to.

"I'm afraid you're badly hurt!" said Sutcombe. "I am very sorry! It was an accident. One of us trod on the gun—"

"I know, I know!" said Vane, promptly, though faintly. "The bullet—fortunately it was a bullet and not shot!—struck me in the shoulder. There's—there's no great harm done. A little more brandy, please! Thank you! If you can help me to the boat—it's no great distance—a drink of water and I shall be well enough to manage it—there is something with which we can get the bullet out, if it's there still."

Sutcombe got some water in his panikin and Vane took a long pull and struggled to his feet.

"I can get some help if you could wait," suggested Sutcombe; but Vane frowned and shook his head.

"No need. If you will give me your arm— Thanks! We are all right now!"

The distance from the scene of the tragi-comedy to the boat seemed interminable to Sutcombe, more so probably than it did to Vane, who was only weak and not in pain; but they got there at last, and Vane, throwing himself down on the beach, told Sutcombe where to find in the boat the things he wanted.

The yawl was a trim little vessel with an apology for a cabin roughly but ingeniously fitted up for its solitary skipper. And Sutcombe saw at a glance that it was the boat and cabin of a gentleman. He found the small leather case of instruments and some bandages, and he quickly had Vane's shoulder bare.

"The bullet has gone through the flesh and out in an upward direction; it's a clean wound," he said.

"So I thought," said Vane. "If you can stop the bleeding— It's not the first time you have rendered 'first aid,' I see, Lord Sutcombe," he added, as Sutcombe deftly staunched the blood and bandaged the wound. "My only pang is one of hunger. There is a tin of soup in the galley for'ard—and—"

Sutcombe got it and heated it at the spirit stove and brought it, with some bread, to his patient.

"Join me," said Vane. "If we break bread together we sha'n't be able to quarrel again. Don't look so cut up, my dear fellow! It was as much my fault as yours; more, in fact. I'd no business here—"

Sutcombe shook his head.

"I have an impression that you have more right to be here, to the whole of the island, than any one, excepting—"

"Miss—Wood, you called her," said Vane. He knew intuitively that this handsome young fellow was his rival, and yet he could not help liking him. "I wonder," he went on, ruminatingly, "what, how much, she has told you, Lord Sutcombe? I wonder also whether you would mind telling me. You came here with her—"

"Miss Wood brought me and my sister. We came in my yacht, the Ariel. We had lost a large sum of money, nearly all we possess, and Miss Wood, knowing of the gold on

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used: it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

By James Ballantine.

James Ballantine, artist and poet, was born at Edinburgh in 1808. He was brought up as a house painter, but afterwards learned drawing under Sir William Allen. He was one of the first to revive the art of glass painting, and was commissioned to execute the stained glass windows for the House of Lords. He published two novels, which contain some of his best known ballads, but he also produced several volumes of poems. He died in 1877.

The bonnie, bonnie bairn sits pokin' in the ase,
Glowerin' in the fire wi' his wee round face;
Laughin' at the fuffin' lowe—what sees he there?
Ha! the young dreamer's biggin' castles in the air!

His wee chubby face, an' his tousy, curly pow,
Are laughin' and noddin' to the dancin' lowe,
He'll brown his rosy cheeks, and singe his sunny hair,
Glow'rin' at the imps wi' their castles in the air.

He sees muckle castles towering to the moon,
He sees little sodgers pulling them a' doun;
Warlds whomlin' up an' down, bleezin' wi' the flare,
Losh! how he loups, as they glimmer in the air!

For a' sae he looks, what can the laddie ken?
He's thinkin' upon naithing, like mony mighty men,
A wee thing makes us think, a sma' thing makes us stare,
There are mair folks than him biggin' castles in the air.

Sic a night in winter may weel mak him cauld;
His chin upon his puffy hand will soon mak him auld;
His brow is brent sae braid, so pray that Daddy Care
Wad let the wean alane wi' his castles in the air.

He'll glower at the fire, and he'll keek at the light;
But mony sparkling stars are swallowed up by night;
Aulder een than his are glamored by a glare,
Hearts are broken—heads are turned—wi' castles in the air.

THE DANCE IN SPAIN.

It Is an Essential Part of the Life of the People.

Dancing is a universal instinct with Spanish women. The great annual feria at Seville is largely an orgy of dancing. As evening approaches everywhere one begins to hear the sound of castanets and to see the gracious movements of the seguidilla, the universal Andalusian dance.

But the fundamental instincts of the Spaniard for dancing and the serious and profound way in which it expresses the temperament of the people are perhaps shown by nothing else so much as by the existence of religious dancing in Spain. At the time of St. Thomas of Villaneuva, bishop of Valencia, it was customary to dance before the sacred elements in the churches of Seville, Toledo, Jerez and Valencia. Religious dancing continued to be common in Catalonia and in Roussillon (the most Spanish of the French provinces) up to the seventeenth century.

But a real and unique survival of religious dancing is the dance of the seises in Seville cathedral, when the choristers, wearing the same costume as they were 400 years ago, perform a dance to the accompaniment of castanets in the space between the high altar and the choir.

Dancing is something more than an amusement in Spain. It is part of that solemn ritual which enters into the whole life of the people.—Twentieth Century Home.

King Honors Hero.

The King has conferred the Albert Medal of the first-class upon Mr. Albert V. Hardwick of Muswell Hill, for exceptional bravery displayed at Finsbury Park Railway Station on December 21, says The Daily Express.

The deed for which Mr. Hardwick is thus honored occurred during the dense fog which lasted for some days before Christmas.

He was one of a large crowd of passengers waiting for a much-delayed train at Finsbury Park Station. The train was just drawing up in the station when a woman was seen to fall on the line. The engine was only 20 yards away.

Without a moment's hesitation Mr. Hardwick jumped on the line. With extraordinary presence of mind, he pulled the woman between the rails, and then, holding her down by the head, threw himself flat beside her.

The train passed over both without inflicting any injury to either the man or the woman.

An effort was made by the Hornsey Borough Council to obtain the Royal Human Society's Medal for Mr. Hardwick, but this was refused. Then the Council petitioned the King, asking His Majesty to bestow the Albert Medal—the "V. C." of private life—upon Mr. Hardwick. The Mayor of Hornsey has announced that he had received a letter from the Home Secretary, stating that the King had acceded to the request.

Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man, but for one man who can stand prosperity there are a hundred who will stand adversity.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, March 29.—(Special.)—The receipts of live stock to-day were 400 cattle, 50 milch cows, 25 sheep and lambs, 2000 calves and 400 hogs. A feature of the market was the strong feeling in good to choice cattle, and prices advanced ¼c per lb., which was due to the limited supply of such. The attendance of buyers was large and the demand was good. Choice beeves sold at 5½c; good at 5c to 5¼c; fairly good at 4½c to 4¾c; fair at 3½c to 4c; common at 2¾c to 3¼c, and inferior at 2c to 2½c. An active trade was done in calves, but the bulk of the offerings consisted of poor stock, which sold at $1.50 to $2.50, while good to choice calves brought from $5 to $10 each. The demand for sheep and lambs was good. Sheep sold at $5.50 to $7, and spring lambs at $3 to $7 each. The trade in milch cows was fair at prices ranging from $25 to $50 each. The supply of hogs was small, for which the demand from packers was not so keen as on Monday, as they state at the present high prices the consumption was falling off. The market was easier and prices 15c to 20c lower, at $7 weighed off cars, for selects, and at $6.75 for mixed lots.

A MIX-UP IN HORSES.

HOW A MILITARY MAN IN KINGSTON GOT POSSESSION OF ARCHBISHOP GAUTHIER'S HORSE.

Kingston Whig: An accidental attempt at appropriation, which occurred Tuesday afternoon, has created considerable amusement and probably the parties most interested are none the least amused. The person who stood to lose by the transaction was Archbishop Gauthier and the possible gainer was Col. Hunter, a well-known figure in city and county military circles. Father O'Gorman, of Gananoque, has been in the west deciding on the merits of a new team of horses for His Grace, and finally purchased a handsome team of bays at Peterboro, whence he shipped them for Kingston. It also happened that Col. Hunter's brother, A. J. Hunter, Harrowsmith, had gone west about the same time on the same mission. By a further coincidence he purchased a team on the same day at Lindsay and started them off on their trip to Kingston. He took the precaution to wire his brother, Col. Hunter, to meet the horses here and take them in charge. The Archbishop's team arrived first and the doughty warrior being "Johnny on the Spot," immediately took possession and had the horses taken to a local hotel stable, whence they were taken in charge by his brother's man, who started off for home with them. Last night, however, the brother himself arrived and with him he brought the team he had purchased. Things were badly twisted for a time, but after some investigation the unintentional appropriation was discovered and a party of unofficial police were sent out this morning to recover the horseflesh.

THE "PEAKE SISTERS" WERE "OUT OF SIGHT."

ENTERTAINMENT IN THE CITY HALL LAST NIGHT, FOR THE HOSPITAL, WAS HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL—LARGE CROWD PRESENT.

The City Hall was last night filled to the doors with an admiring and perspiring crowd, the raison d'etre being an entertainment give in aid of the Hospital. The stage was beautifully decorated with flags and festoons, booths were situated in different portions of the hall, where fair ladies smiled on and extracted coin of the realm from more or less willing victims; small tables were in the southwest corner, where people ate ice cream with as much gusto as though it were July; fair waitresses fluttered about, Chalaupka's orchestra played, and all went merry as a marriage bell. In a sheltered nook near the door Dr. Gibson was explaining the wonders of the X-rays to anybody who had the price. In the northeast corner was the fish pond. Net fishing was strictly prohibited. On the east side of the hall was the flower booth. The flowers were beautiful; but hardly more fair than the ladies who sold them. In the southeast corner was the booth devoted to candy and useful articles.

Mrs. Jack Bell, convenor of the entertainment, kindly gave the writer some information in regard to what was going on. Yes, the entertainment was for the Hospital, which needed the money very badly. Everybody had been most kind. They hoped to make $500.

The people moved around from one booth to another, and finally sat down, tired out. It was a great crush.

At 9.15 the entertainment proper began, when the Peake sisters, orphans from Alaska, marched on the stage, their faces wreathed in smiles, surmounting the aforesaid smiles being long sugar-loaf hats. The entertainment which followed was in the nature of a burlesque. The "Chief Sister" put the girls through their facings, and under her direction they rendered choruses, solos, recitations, etc. It was quite an entertaining act, the monologue of the conductress being witty and well-delivered. The personnel of the "Peake Sisters, from Alaska," was:

Conductress, Mrs. Leech; Misses Mabel Vermilyea, Jessie Robertson, Gertrude Price, Margaret Keith, Helena St. Charles, Anna Ponton, Katie Bawden, Grace Webster, Kathleen Stork, B. Gillum, C. Weller, Winnifred Walker, Massey, Sidna Browne, Molly Vermilyea, Lulu Davey, M. Sills, L. Sills, Amy Wallbridge.

Accompanist, Mrs. Stewart Lockridge.

Those in charge of the various booths were:

Flower and Candy.—Mrs. Rathbun, convenor; Misses Wallbridge, Frost, Bogart, Carrier and Dunnet.

Fancy and Useful Articles — Mrs. Clarke, convenor; Mrs. Ritchie, Mrs. Yeomans, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Templeton, Mrs. Denmark, Misses C. Wallbridge, G. Stewart, Ritchie, Mackay, R. Stewart, Chandler, J. Maclean.

Fishpond—Miss Webster, convenor; Misses Pelletier (Trenton), Gillen, Dumble.

Refreshments—Mrs. Moynes, convenor; Mrs. Sills, Mrs. Chown, Misses Hurley, Helen Rathbun, M. Stork, Carson, Caldwell, L. Sills, Charlotte Hay, Jessie Neilson.

THE BAY BRIDGE.

ALD. GORDON SUGGESTS A PLAN BY WHICH IT CAN BE MADE FREE ON TUESDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir,—The following has been suggested as a simple and equitable means of providing the funds for freeing the bay bridge on Tuesdays and Thursdays as proposed.

Persons wishing to cross over from Prince Edward on Tuesdays and Thursdays up to 11 o'clock a.m. to pay full return fare, for which they shall receive a return ticket with a coupon attached, showing the date and amount paid. Thus for a single rig and driver the coupon would be 20 cents, for a double rig and driver 30 cents, and for each additional passenger a 10 cent coupon would be issued. These coupons to be accepted as cash in payment for goods by the different business people entering into the agreement, on the date of issue only.

This would render unnecessary the raising of an amount, which is indefinite, by assessment or subscription, and each would in this way pay in proportion to benefit received.

A few are determined to put this matter to the test, but it would be much better for all to unite in bearing the expense and sharing the advantages of such an arrangement.

A public union meeting of the Council of the Board of Trade and the Retail Merchants' Association is being called for next Tuesday evening, to consider not only this question, but the broader one of finally freeing the bridge altogether, to which all are invited, and which every business man should make a special effort to attend.

I am,
Yours truly,
W. H. GORDON.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL."

The Louisville (Ky.) Times of January 31 says of Bertha Galland's performance of 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall": "Those who did not enjoy Bertha Galland in 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall' at Macauley's last night missed one of the rarest treats of the season. It is one of the most delightful things of the year without doubt, and Miss Galland's work is so clear cut and so finished that it leaves nothing to be demanded. After the first act she was compelled to make a little curtain speech, which she did in the happiest way, and after all of the acts she was called out for a bow and a hand kiss. Her company is without fault and the performance as a whole is full of enjoyment. Beautifully staged and delightfully acted, it is not difficult to understand why 'Dorothy Vernon' has been such a success."

DORA THORNE.

A novel situation for melo-drama is the finish of the last act of Dora Thorne. Not a word is spoken for fully three minutes before the final curtain, and the most remarkable thing about it all, is that the most excitable and restless in the audience, especially in the gallery, remain quietly seated until the very end of the play, which is brought about quite naturally, and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. "Dora Thorne" will be seen here at the Carman on Monday next, and much interest is being shown in the coming attraction.

Education gives a woman more words to talk with.

THEY HAVE ARRIVED

ENGLISH EMIGRANTS SPOKEN OF IN RECENT ISSUE OF THE INTELLIGENCER ARRIVED LAST EVENING.

Last evening, between 5 and 6 o'clock, an emigrant special train came up from the east over the Grand Trunk Railway line. When this city was reached, some 25 families, in all about 100 persons, disembarked and made their way down town, where they found lodging for the night. These people came out under the care of the Self-Help Emigration Society, and the Farmers' Association of this country are also interested in them. The party which came here have nearly all been provided with places as farm helpers, and the majority will reside in Prince Edward County. They are respectable in appearance and by their conversation appear to be an intelligent class of people.

THE GATE OF EUROPE.

Buda Pesth, the Hungarian capital, is one of the handsomest cities in the world. Its wide streets, bordered by magnificent buildings, its parks, palaces, theatres, and, last but not least, its luxurious cafes which have no equal, cannot fail to impress the visitor with its wealth and beauty.

The city is built on volcanic ground and the internal fires are still smouldering. A visit to the St. Lucas hot sulphur baths across the Danube at Buda might lead the visitor to think that the infernal regions are not far off, and indeed a humorous preacher could make good use of this when moralizing on the gay and luxuriant life of the Pesth half of the consolidated town. Another curiosity of the spot is the natural aperient waters renowned throughout the world, of which Apenta is the leading one. The Apenta accumulates in wells dug for the purpose, and absorbs from the soil the salts that make it a valuable purgative.

To one returning from the East by the Oriental Express, Buda Pesth appears like the gate of Europe, as it really is, for this was the last outpost of the Turks in their march westward.

Smashed a Window.

Last evening a young man named Harry Barrage was acting in a disorderly manner at the Crystal Hotel and finally amused himself by breaking a plate glass window, valued at about $20. The police were called and the window smasher was conveyed to the police station, where he spent the night.

Barrage was brought up before the Magistrate this morning and the matter was arranged by the defendant agreeing to pay $2.50 per week until the cost of putting in a new window is covered. He has also to pay the city costs.

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Chas. Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by all druggists.

Lawyers, stenographers and other users of typewriter paper will find on sale at The Intelligencer Office a typewriter paper that will suit their tastes and pockets.

FORMER POPULAR RESIDENT DIED EARLY THIS MORNING.

MRS. (REV.) R. H. BRETT, NEE DAFOE, PASSED AWAY AT WEBBWOOD, ONTARIO.

A message was received in the city this morning, at an early hour, announcing the serious illness at Webbwood, Ontario, of Mrs. (Rev.) R. H. Brett, and a subsequent message announced her death. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Florence Dafoe, was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dafoe, who reside on Bridge St. West. On July 15th, 1902, deceased was married to Rev. Mr. Brett, who was known to many in this city, he being a graduate of Albert College. The young couple went to Webbwood when married, and have since resided there. Mrs. Brett was for years an active member of Holloway St. Methodist church and was for some time its very efficient organist. She was a general favorite with all who knew her and her demise will be much regretted. In addition to the bereaved husband, an infant survives. The family will receive the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

The remains will be brought here to-morrow for interment.

PROF. CAPON OF QUEEN'S

POINTS OUT MANY THINGS ON WHICH SIR WILFRID LAURIER HAS TAKEN A NARROW VIEW.

Prof. Capon, of Queen's University, writes on the autonomy question in the forthcoming issue of Queen's Quarterly. He says in part:

"I am not sure but in that historic alliance of Macdonald and Cartier there was a safer and healthier life for the original compact, for the Act of Union than there ever has been since. One cannot but recognize but that it has for some time become a one-sided affair under Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Who could be blind to the meaning of his ebullition over the Alaskan affair, or to the regrettable want of magnanimity in his treatment of the Lord Dundonald incident? Who can be blind to the nature of the vengeance which keeps Manitoba a pigmy province, in the midst of gigantic territories? What Premier of English race would have done that? The autocratic manner also in which Sir Wilfrid has dealt with this great constitutional question of Northwest autonomy is really too evident.

"He has forgotten to consult his strongest colleagues amongst those who represent British and Protestant sentiment on this racial question: he has forgotten to consult Mr. Fielding and Mr. Sifton. One cannot but notice that they have become rather silent for some time back. A strange reticence has overtaken them under his rule. They must stay in the shade. Mr Bourassa may speak freely, but not they. Everything, I am afraid, the hierarchy, the modern Rouges — who have changed color somewhat — the Irish agitator, has a better key to his heart than native British sentiment in Canada has. It is but natural, perhaps, but there is danger in it, though Sir Wilfrid is too wilful, Mr. Prefontaine too busy and the gentlemen of Le Ligue Nationaliste too young to see it. One of the great merits of the old English Liberal school was that its members had a just appreciation of the law of action and reaction which makes coercive legislation so dangerous where racial feelings are concerned. And Sir Wilfrid used to pride himself on belonging to that school!"

Sports and Pastimes

BASEBALL.

How to Hit the "Spit" Ball.

Baseball men argue that the action of the spit ball as pitched by such a master as Chesbro is as follows: It comes up shoulder high and a trifle faster than the recognized slow ball, and yet not so fast as to twist it. In other words, the seams are visible all the way from the pitcher's hands to the point where it breaks. It is pitched with the same motion as the fast ball. About shoulder high up and about the length of the bat away from the pan it breaks either of three ways, generally uncontrolled by the pitcher. Its course after the quick break is either straight down or a fadeaway to the right or left. In the solution of this problem there are open to the batter several ways of going after it. One is to crawl up on it and get it before it breaks. The height of the ball spoils this somewhat. Another plan is to lie back and slap it with the short hold on the choked bat, planning to get the exhausted curve. A third plan, which baseball men believe in by actual experience, is to stand naturally, lengthen the batting surface by gripping the bat closer to the handle's end, as Anson and his type did, and swing at it. Clarke has the choice of either of these ways, and is having his men practice both in order to note by which the best results are obtained.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

The only news that has come from the seat of war is that skirmishes occurred between the Russians and Japanese along the line of railway on the 26th. This, being received at St. Petersburg, shows that communications with Linevitch's army have not been cut. The peace talk at the present time may be taken with considerable reserve. Neither side are ceasing in their preparations to continue the war, and the peace news cabled from the various European capitals merely indicates that the wish is father to the thought.

Owing to the complete silence of the Japanese about all that is going on in Manchuria except the movements up the railway there is great uncertainty as to what the next developments may be. The armies of Generals Kuroki and Kawamura seem to have vanished into space east of the line of the Russian retreat, but in what direction cannot be told for certain. One report represents one of them as making for Vladivostok by way of Kirin, but if it has taken that road it is probably with the intention of cutting the Harbin-Vladivostok railway somewhere about Nonguta, a town of about 12,000 inhabitants, on the Hurka River, which flows nearly due north into the Sungari at Hanhalai or Sansintchen. From Ninguta, which stands about midway between Vladivostok and Harbin, there is a direct and well-travelled road to Possiet Bay, a distance of eight or nine marches, which would have to be evacuated by the Russians and become a naval base for the Japanese within easy distance of Vladivostok.

Harbin seems to be becoming a dangerous base for a defeated army with slender communications, and it is not surprising that everything likely to embarrass the army is being moved from there backward to Tsitsihar, a town of about 35,000 inhabitants, on the east bank of the Nonni River, some 200 miles northwest of Harbin. But if, as reported, a Japanese cavalry column with a large number of Chinese irregulars is moving up the trade road from Kaiyuan that crosses the Nonni at no great distance below Tsitsihar, a further retrograde movement to the west of the Khingan Mountains would become imperative. In the event of the abandonment of all the country to the east of the Nonni, a very short time would suffice for the Japanese to send a force to Aigun, on the Amur, opposite Blagovestchensk, cut the navigation of the Amur at that point, and at one stroke cut off further access by the Russians, to the sea by that river and obtain possession of all the steamers, barges and the supplies of grain on which the Russians are now depending for the time when navigation opens. — The Globe.

Flowers for the Children.

The school children of the city were yesterday provided with two varieties of flower seeds, the same being a gift from the local Horticultural Society. This is for the purpose of encouraging the children in growing flowers, and in the autumn a display, similar to that held last autumn, will take place. Prizes will be given for the best display made by pupils from each school, in addition to general prizes. The children last year took an active interest in raising flowers, and this year they will no doubt do likewise.

Stimulation vs. New Creation

In those words is hidden the secret that distinguishes good medicine from poor medicine. Stimulation generally has its bad after effect.

New creation is new life and new life means new vigor to fight disease. Alcoholic medicines are stimulants.

Calisaya Hypophosphites derives its virtue from the Hypophosphites of Iron, Manganese, Lime, Soda, Quinine and Strychnine combined with Calisaya Bark—all new creative muscle-building, blood making principles.

FACED HIS OWN RECORD

Hon. G. E. Foster Doesn't Turn Corner On Autonomy Bills.

After Three Trials He Declares He Will Never Again Hold the Rights of the Minority Supreme as Against the Great Force of Public Opinion—Sir William Mulock Replies in Vituperative Speech.

Ottawa, March 30.—The Hon. George Eulas Foster was heard yesterday on the great question of the session, the autonomy bill. He spoke from 3.30 to 6 o'clock and left on the pages of Hansard what many good judges believe to be the best speech he ever delivered on the floor of Parliament.

Faced His Own Record.

He faced the question courageously and as manfully faced his own record as one of the authors of the remedial bill. Many wondered how he would turn the corner. The truth is that he did not attempt to turn any corner. He declared that he acted in accordance with his honest convictions in 1896, and that under similar conditions his judgment would be precisely as it was in the stirring days of the historic crisis. On that occasion the Conservative Government, knowing that it was politically inexpedient, attempted to confer on the minority in Manitoba the rights which a high judicial decision had conceded to them.

The Present Bill.

It had been urged in defence of the autonomy bill, he said, that 41 per cent. of the people of Canada demanded the legislation. Where was that 41 per cent, he asked, in 1896 when the Conservative Government was attempting to serve it? In the elections of 1896, again in 1900, and once again in 1904, it declared against the party which endeavored to give it what were, he believed, to be its just dues, and in the face of these decisions, Mr. Foster said, he would never again hold the rights of the minority supreme as against the great force of public opinion. Mr. Foster gently but forcefully dealt with the alleged tolerance of Henri Bourassa, M. P. He showed up the Quebec schools and denied that the privileges enjoyed by the Provincial Government.

Mulock Speaks in Defence.

Sir William Mulock had been glaring at Mr. Foster all through the latter's speech. When, at 9 o'clock last night, private bills were disposed of, Sir William took up the debate and by way of preliminary amenities accused Mr. Foster of trying to sow the seeds of discord, to the great injury of his country. It must be extremely elevating, he said sarcastically, for Canada to take its ideas of political morality from such a source. Sir William searched Mr. Foster's political record, dwelling on what he termed the latter's treachery to Sir Mackenzie Bowell and his conduct generally in the crisis of 1896. Mr. Foster had tried to create the impression that Quebec was being given a stone instead of bread. His object was to envelop the whole Dominion in one huge religious conflagration. The school question, he declared, was being settled on a fair basis, instead of being allowed to remain open and stop Canada's progress.

A. E. Lancaster replied with a vigorous speech. He said the Postmaster-General had wasted the time of the House abusing Mr. Foster and Dr. Sproule. No passionate speeches had been delivered from the Conservative side. The new Provinces, Mr. Lancaster declared, should be left to deal with the school question as they thought fit.

Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville) moved the adjournment of the debate.

By a majority of 24 the House passed the bill giving the Ottawa Electric Co. power to absorb the Consumers' and Metropolitan concerns.

The Vacant Portfolio.

Mr. Borden asked when the announcement would be made of the Government's intention in regard to filling the vacant portfolio of the Interior. With his sunniest smile Sir Wilfrid replied, "probably to-morrow."

G. T. R. Gives Running Rights.

Ottawa, March 30.—The G. T. R. has decided to give the Intercolonial Railway running rights over the Canada Atlantic, which the G. T. R. recently acquired. It is understood the Government railway is to pay nothing for the privilege.

FIVE DOCTORS CRIED "HOPELESS"

But Jacob DeWitta wasn't going to cry quits without a fight for his life. He pinned his faith to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, and it saved him.

Jacob DeWitta, of Hay Island, had been under treatment with five doctors. Each in turn giving up his case as a hopeless case of Heart trouble, said he might drop dead any minute. He fell in weight from 214 to 143 pounds, but he "pinned his faith" to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, and he declares he owes his life to it. From the first dose he found benefit. To-day says he never felt better in his life. 83

Neither will ever cure you. There is one—and only one—cure for Catarrh—Japanese Catarrh Cure. It never fails.

Here's what a druggist says about it:—"When I say I believe Japanese Catarrh Cure the only cure for catarrh on the market, I think I know just what I am talking about. I have tried every remedy and also several doctors, but only received temporary relief. After hearing several of our customers speak so highly of it, I tried it. From the very first, it gave me much relief, and now, after using four boxes of Japanese Catarrh Cure, find myself completely cured. LONEY IS "NOT GUILTY"

Jury's Verdict Arrived At After Four Hours' Deliberation.

How Laurin Was Killed Told by Defence Witnesses at Cornwall—Testimony to Show It Was an Accident—The Judge Unfavorable — Grand Jury Condemns Rough Hockey Play and Places Press Under Ban.

Cornwall, March 30.—The first witness for the defence in the hockey manslaughter case yesterday was George Chalmers, of Maxville. He was at the hockey match on February 24, and was behind the Maxville goal. When Loney and Laurin met Loney got the puck and shot it up the ice. Laurin hit Loney across the legs with his stick. Laurin turned and put up his fists. They separated, Loney returned to his position, followed by Laurin. Loney's stick was up over Laurin's head. When the latter made a quick move Loney's stick struck him one the head. Loney was at one time working with the witness, and he believed that he was one of the finest young men in Maxville.

Laurin Struck Loney.

Edward Burke, of Maxville, an employe of the Bank of Ottawa, was next. He said Loney took the puck from Laurin, who then struck Loney twice in the face, pushing his head back two feet. Loney then struck Laurin on the head. When his stick was broken Laurin should have returned to his position, instead of following up Loney. Cross-examined witness said that Loney was still facing Laurin, and was only turning to return to his position. When struck, Loney seemed to lose his balance.

Loney Was Followed.

Cecil Weegar, of Maxville, corroborated the two previous witnesses, and added that when Laurin followed Loney he struck at the latter with the broken handle of his stick. When Loney turned around after Laurin fell he had his hands on his face.

Cross-examined, the witness, although only 16 years of age, said he had on three or four occasions seen men knocked down and out with a hockey stick.

J. A. Welsh, cheese buyer, Maxville, was next called. His version was much like that of previous defence witnesses. Loney's head, when first struck in the face, went back about three feet. Loney seemed to be unsteady on his feet, and while balancing himself he brought his stick down on Laurin's head. Afterwards some one came up and struck Loney twice from behind.

Laurin Broke His Stick.

Thomas Johnson, section foreman on the C. A. R., said that Laurin broke his stick over Loney's leg, afterwards following up the Maxville player and striking him in the face. While recovering himself Loney struck Laurin, and the latter fell. Then Leo Laurin came up and struck Loney on the back. Loney skated backwards 18 or 20 feet, followed by Alcide Laurin, before the fatal blow.

Dr. C. J. Hamilton, of Cornwall, said that he had listened to the evidence of Drs. Macdonald and McLennan and said that the part of the skull fractured would be very thin and unprotected. A fall on a hard projection or a hard blow from a fist on this part of the head might cause a fracture. Cross-examined, Dr. Hamilton said he did not purpose contradicting the doctors who had performed the post-mortem. He was simply stating what had happened in other cases.

Was It An Accident?

Wm. Doucett, merchant, Maxville, saw Laurin break his stick on Loney's leg and followed this with a blow in the face. Loney's head went back and when he recovered himself his stick struck Laurin. Loney then swung around and put his hand to his face. He thought that the blow struck by Loney was accidental.

Lorne McLean was called by the defence. He was just opposite the spot where Laurin met his death., Loney having taken the puck from Laurin, the latter struck Loney with his stick and followed him up hitting Loney three times in the face with his fist. After the third blow Loney struck Laurin.

Cross-examined witness said that Laurin struck Loney twice in the face. Laurin, after the fatal blow, fell full length. To His Lordship he could not account for Laurin's failure to ward off the blow, although he had his hands up.

Prisoner's Sister in Box.

Miss Loney, sister of the prisoner, saw blood on her brother's face just before Laurin struck Loney on the back; at this time her brother was stooping and his nose was bleeding.

Laurin's Hands Were Up.

R. A. Rothwell, of Maxville, the Government cheese instructor, prepared the plan of the Maxville rink produced as an exhibit, and he also saw Laurin break his stick on Loney and strike Loney with his fist; as he recovered his balance Loney's stick struck Laurin.

Cross-examined, witness saw Loney stagger, but did not see Laurin's blows land on Loney, neither did he see Loney's stick when it fell on Laurin's head. The latter, in his opinion, was a quick blow, but not heavy or with a great deal of force. Laurin still had his hands up when Loney struck him.

In His Own Defence.

At the afternoon session Loney was put in the box and swore he had never been ruled off and never struck a man with the purpose of hurting him. He received a blow on the face from Laurin which dazed him and he remained in that condition until some time later when he was struck on the back by some one.

His Lordship addressed the jury at considerable length, explaining the law in regard to manslaughter. He held that the only excusable homicide was what was purely accidental or what was done to protect life or prevent grievous bodily harm. His charge to the jury seemed to be unfavorable to the prisoner.

Verdict is "Not Guilty."

The jury, after being out about four hours brought in a verdict of not guilty.

The grand jury in their report strongly condemned the tendency to rough play and brutal tactics in hockey, lacrosse and football, which frequently resulted in painful and permanent injuries and sometimes death to the participants. They criticized the press for giving so much prominence to sporting news, and held that the press was largely responsible, in a moral sense, for the results, as the reports fired the imagination of hot-headed spectators, who encouraged and incited excitable players to deeds of violence.

The lionizing of rough players had reached such a stage that unless there there was a change made it might be necessary to have such sports prohibited by legislation and placed in the class with bull fights and cocking mains.

ATTEMPTED MURDER.

Insane Farmhand Tries to Kill His Former Employer.

Ridgetown, March 30.—Frustrated in an attempt to burn the barn of Geo. M. Eastlake, a well-known Oxford farmer, for whom he worked last summer, Percy McIntyre, a young Englishman, made a desperate but unsuccessful attempt on the life of his former employer.

McIntyre, who is said to be insane, bore a grudge against Eastlake, and when the latter saw him crossing the yard toward the barn he ordered the Englishman off his grounds. McIntyre then turned toward the house and entered at the kitchen door. Eastlake followed. When Eastlake crossed the threshold McIntyre stood with a sledge hammer, ready to strike, but taking advantage of the weight of the weapon Eastlake rushed in upon him and the two went down.

Shouted to Wife to Get Aid.

Eastlake was uppermost, but was unable to hold his assailant, and shouted to his wife to get aid. Mrs. Eastlake returned after a few minutes with a neighbor, and the prisoner was bound hand and foot.

McIntyre was locked up and appeared before G. A. Watson, J. P., yesterday afternoon. He will be taken to Chatham for trial.

McIntyre admitted that he had intended to burn down the barn, but felt that it was a shame to burn the cattle. The prisoner has recently caused considerable trouble to the police in Windsor and Chatham.

LORD NORTON DEAD.

Under Secretary for the Colonies Under Lord Derby.

London, March 30.—Lord Norton, who as Sir Charles Adderley, took an active part in the establishment of colonial self-government, is dead, aged 90 years.

Lord Norton, the Rt. Hon. Sir Charles Bowyer Adderley, K. C. M. G., the eldest son of the late Charles Clement Adderley, of Harris Hall, Warwickshire, and Norton, Staffordshire, was born in August, 1814. He graduated as B. A. from Christ Church in 1835, and was elected to the House of Commons as a Conservative in 1841 to represent the northern division of Staffordshire, which seat he retained 37 years. He became Under Secretary for the Colonies under Lord Derby, and was made K. C. M. G. in 1869. In 1874 he was appointed President of the Board of Trade. He took an active part in the establishment of colonial self-government and in the introduction of reformatory institutions, and was the author of works on education and penal discipline, and other subjects connected with colonial interests. He was raised to the Peerage in 1878, and took his title from Norton-on-the-Moors in Staffordshire.

A CAUSE OF HEADACHE.

ONE VERY COMMON CAUSE, GENERALLY OVERLOOKED.

Headache is a symptom, an indication of derangement or disease in some organ, and the cause of the headache is difficult to locate because so many diseases have headache as a prominent symptom; derangement of the stomach and liver, heart trouble, kidney disease, lung trouble, eye strain or ill-fitting glasses all produce headaches and if we could always locate the organ which is at fault the cure of obstinate headaches would be a much simpler matter.

However, for that form of headache called frontal headache, pain back of the eyes and in forehead, the cause is now known to be catarrh of the head and throat; when the headache is located in back of head and neck it is often caused from catarrh of the stomach or liver.

At any rate, catarrh is the most common cause of such headaches and the cure of the catarrh causes a prompt disappearance of the headaches.

There is at present no treatment for catarrh so convenient and effective as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a new internal remedy in tablet form, composed of antiseptics like red gum, blood root, which act upon the blood and cause the elimination of the catarrhal poison from the system through the natural channels.

Miss Cora Ainsley, a prominent school teacher in one of our normal schools, speaks of her experience with catarrhal headaches and eulogizes Stuart's Catarrh Tablets as a cure for them. She says: "I suffered daily from severe frontal headache and pain in the back of the eyes, at times so intensely as to incapacitate me in my daily duties. I had suffered from catarrh, more or less for years, but never thought it was the cause of my headaches, but finally became convinced that such was the case because the headaches were always worse whenever I had a cold or fresh attack of catarrh.

"Stuart's Catarrh Tablets were highly recommended to me as a safe and pleasant catarrh cure and after using a few fifty cent boxes which I procured from my druggist's I was surprised and delighted to find that both the catarrh and headaches had gone for good."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are sold by druggists at fifty cents per package, under the guarantee of the proprietors that they contain absolutely no cocaine (found in so many catarrh cures), no opium (so common in cheap cough cures), nor any harmful drug. They contain simply the wholesome antiseptics necessary to destroy and drive from the system the germs of catarrhal disease.

BRITONS IN URUGUAY PRISON.

Captain and Crew of Sealing Schooner Seized at Montevideo.

Victoria, B. C., March 31.—Advices have been received here that Capt. Mattrian and crew of the sealing schooner Agnes G. Donahue, owned by Capt. Balcom, of Victoria, have been imprisoned at Montevideo by the Uruguayan Government, which seized the vessel for alleged poaching on the shore rookeries.

The captain was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and the members of the crew to two years. Capt. Balcom has protested and claims $65,000 damages. The Ottawa Government has taken up the case through Great Britain with Uruguay.

STRIKE DECLARED OFF.

Manager Gives Miners Three Months Instead of One to Consider.

Halifax, N. S., March 31.—Manager Cowans of the Springhill Collieries informed the men last night that he had acceded to their request to give the coal cutters three months to consider the proposed cut of 12 per cent. in their wages instead of the one month, as he had announced. In consequence of this the proposed strike has been declared off and there is great rejoicing in Springhill in consequence. The proposed cut would have meant $4,576 loss to the miners in wages every month.

Miners Are Waiting.

Altoona, Pa., March 31.—The miners who are members of the joint scale committee have sent to the operators a communication offering to continue work up to April 5 in any mine where the employer will agree to pay the present scale of prices. They say they do not desire to complicate the situation in view of the meeting of the operators on Saturday next, and in the hope that an amicable settlement of the new scale question will soon be reached.

Do Municipal Telephones Pay?

The Experience of the Town of Neepawa, Man., Proves it.

Bell Company Saw a Good Thing and Bought Out the Beaverton Independent Company Which Was a Paying System Before Being Sold to Bell—Particulars of Successful Rural Company Operating Between Stouffville and Markham.

Ottawa, March 31.—The special committee on telephones heard a good deal of interesting information yesterday morning regarding the working of a rural system in the vicinity of Beaverton, and of a municipal system in Neepawa, Manitoba. Mr. Angus Cameron, who financed the Beaverton system, told the story of its establishment and subsequent absorption by the Bell Co. This system, which went under the name of “the Independent Telephone Co.,” was established in August, 1902, and, after being operated eight months, was bought by the Bell Co. They had 11 miles of poles, 20 or 25 miles of wire, and 32 subscribers. The system was owned by a partnership, who expended about $6,000 in its construction and equipment, or about $50 per phone. They rented the system to subscribers at $15 or $18 nearly all the subscribers living in the rural districts. After the Bell Co. bought the line they raised the rate from $15 to $20 for new subscribers. Mr. Cameron said the system was a paying one before being sold to the Bell Co. They sold because they were without capital to carry on a war with the Bell.

The Neepawa Experience.

Mr. John Crawford, M. P., gave an account of the municipal telephone system in his own town of Neepawa. The system was established five or six years ago in opposition to a then local system of the Bell Co., and local pride succeeded in driving out the Bell Co. and giving the municipal company a monopoly of the business. A short time ago the Bell Co. in extending their long-distance system in the west returned to Neepawa. They are, however, not received with much favor, and have only 12 subscribers in the town, while the town system has 200. The town system's rate is $10 for private and $20 for business 'phones, while the Bell Co. charges $25 and gives long-distance connection at the usual rates. Those who patronize the Bell system usually have the local system also.

The system cost $6,000 to $8,000 originally and considerable improvements have been made. The system had brought a profit to the town which, he thought, amounted to almost $2,000 a year. The townspeople favored the municipal system and would not be inclined to give it up.

Another Rural System.

The chairman, Sir Wm. Mulock, presented the City of Toronto's resolution favoring Government ownership of long-distance lines, also a letter from Alex. D. Bruce, of Gormley, Ont., giving some particulars of a local rural system between Stouffville and Markham, covering twenty-five miles, comprising forty phones and costing the farmer subscribers $12 per year, while the Bell Co. charged the farmers in the same district $20. They are now considering the advisability of extending to Aurora without extra charge, that is $12 for private and $15 for business phones. They hope thereby to add twenty subscribers. “By all means let us have public ownership,” concluded Mr. Bruce.

The committee will meet again on Tuesday.

SIFTON WILL NOT RETURN.

The Thirty Days Within Which He Could Have Gone Back Without Re-election Have Expired.

Ottawa, March 31.—Whatever may be the ultimate outcome of the present situation, one thing seems to be pretty clear, and that is that Hon. Clifford Sifton will not return to the Cabinet. The 30 days within which he could have gone back without the necessity of being re-elected expired Wednesday.

When the House met yesterday Mr. Foster enquired if the Prime Minister had anything to communicate in reference to the filling of the vacant portfolio of the Interior.

“It is,” said Mr. Foster, “ a question of the greatest moment, and we have not yet had any really thorough answer to it.”

“I have no information to give my honorable friend to-day,” was Sir Wilfrid Laurier's reply.

“And I suppose,” Mr. Foster continued, “I shall be equally unsuccessful when I ask why the mandate, which was ordered by the House on the 25th of January last, regarding the free transportation of hay over the I. C. R. has not yet been produced.”

The Prime Minister made a note of the matter, with a promise to enquire into it.

Autonomy Debate Resumed.

This done, the debate on the autonomy bill was resumed by Mr. Demers. J. G. H. Bergeron was the next speaker, and he was followed by Mr. Belcourt, whose argument was entirely confined to the constitutional aspect of the autonomy bill.

Among the agitators against the bill Mr. Belcourt mentioned Dr. Sproule and “a new renegade Liberal.”

“What about The Globe?” asked Mr. Henderson, of Halton.

“Well. I meant renegade Liberals,” said Mr. Belcourt.

Mr. Belcourt charged that the Opposition leader had been forced into the position which he had taken.

“That is absolutely untrue,” Mr. Borden replied.

Mr. Belcourt accepted the statement, but pointed to the divided ranks of the Opposition to show that the majority of the House would support the bill.

Mr. Lake (Qu' Appelle) followed Mr. Belcourt, declaring that the Provinces being created were not children but full grown men and were entitled to treatment as such. Under the bill which was being brought down they were not receiving this treatment.

Walter Scott (West Assiniboia) adjourned the debate.

Never Took His Seat.

Ottawa, March 31.—The eccentricities of Rufus Curry, of Windsor, N. S., led to a long discussion in the Senate yesterday. Mr. Curry was appointed to the Senate two years ago, but he refused to take his seat, and yesterday the committee on privileges declared the seat vacant. A request was made of Mr. Curry to explain his conduct, but he answered that never having taken the oath of office he had no explanations to make. Sir Mackenzie Bowell argued that Senators are summoned, not appointed, that it was an authoritative invitation. The seat, therefore, became vacant thirty days after the appointment and could have been filled any day after that time. The report of the committee on privileges was finally accepted.

G. T. P. SELECTS TERMINAL.

Reasons Why Fort William is Preferred to Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, March 31.—Fort William gets the Grand Trunk Pacific terminal. General Manager Morse makes the statement that Fort William affords a better point for terminals on account of the large amount of lands available, which would allow room for expansion for the next 100 years. It is believed that the Canadian Pacific influenced the G. T. P. in the selection, as with two companies at that point large dredging concessions can be procured from the Government, besides making the Mission River navigable. A branch line will be run into this place.

The site chosen for the terminals is on the Indian reserve property, south of the Kaministiquia. Work will commence at once. There are about 3,000 acres involved, about half being level, and, the remainder being taken up by Mount McKay. The limits of Fort William will be extended to take in the territory and a bridge connection made. The G. T. P. will enter Fort William midway between the C. P. R. and C. N. R. The town will pay the railway company $300,000, the final payment of $100,000 when the company has spent $900,000.

MANITOBA'S STRONG PROTEST.

Appeal to the Electors Against Insult From Sir Wilfrid.

Winnipeg, March 31.—The Tribune last night says, in part, under black headlines, in an evidently inspired article:—

“There is a crisis on in local politics, and most substantial developments may be looked for any day. It will not surprise anyone to see the members of the Local Government hand in their resignations, through the Premier, and vacate their offices.

“It is no secret that the Government, in keeping with universal public opinion, have been deeply aggrieved at the treatment received from the Ottawa authorities with regard to the extension of the boundaries of the Province.”

Accepts Britain's Offer.

Berlin, March 31.—The Reichstag's petition committee yesterday voted to accept the offer of Great Britain and the United States to pay $40,000 each as indemnity to the Samoans and to pay the balance of the claims, which are estimated at from $20,000 to $30,000, from the imperial treasury.

The Question of Compensation.

Woodstock Express: The Wine and Spirit Journal makes a strong plea for compensation should there be any general attempt at license reduction. It argues that the law has always recognized the right of capital to protection against arbitrary enactments that destroy its investment, and the fact that a license is usually issued for only a year carries with it absolutely no right of summary cancellation without cause. The very assumption, it holds, that a license is merely a temporary permit is false. Licenses, it points out, renew as a matter of course, subject to observance of whatever regulations may from time to time be framed for proper control of the trade. When the public, it assers, desire a decrease of abolition of licenses, either general or local, clearly it is the duty of the public to compensate those whose investment and livelihood they have taken away.

The argument is not without force, though it is certainly not unanswerable. The man who goes into the liquor business presumably goes in with his eyes open. He knows that he must secure a license in order that he may conduct a business, and that this license must be renewed from time to time. He knows that his business must be conducted subject to certain laws and regulations, and that these laws and regulations are subject to change. He knows that his business is not exactly on the same footing as any other business, and the fact that, knowing all this, he goes into it, shows that he is willing to take his chances. One of these chances is the loss of his license for one cause or another.

While this is true, it is also a fact that there is an aversion in most communities from interfering with a man's means of making a living. Men may object to that means on general principles, or they may object to the methods adopted in particular cases; still the fact that the man depends upon the businedss for his living, and that the community has by its consent, tacit consent, at any rate, endorsed the business and the business methods, is not infrequently sufficient to silence the objections. There can be little doubt that if there was some provision for compensation there would be less hesitancy about cutting off licenses. Whether the public generally or the trade itself should make provision for the compensation is another question.

The Montreal Gazette, discussing the problem, points out that there is no necessity for compensation. "When and wherever license-holders live up to the full spirit of the law," says The Gazette, "the injury done by the business is not serious and the number of licenses in existence is not of great importance. It is only where failure to observe the full spirit of the law exists that abuses are in evidence. Herein lies the best method of reducing the number of licenses—refusing renewals to those who have failed to observe the law. Not even the Wine and Spirit Journal will argue that this method would be unjust, or that the license-holders so deprived of the right to sell would be entitled to compensation." The Express has already emphasized this fact. An improved license law, raising the standard of qualification and reducing the number of licenses in proportion to population, if vigorously enforced, as the present Government has promised to enforce it, would result in a material reduction of the number of licenses without involving any reasonable demand for compensation.

A UNIQUE INCIDENT.

"SENATOR" CURRY WOULD NOT RESIGN AS HE HAD NEVER ACCEPTED.

Ottawa, March 30.—The Senate yesterday declared that Rufus Curry, of Windsor, N. S., forfeited his seat in that body by failure to attend during the last two sessions. Mr. Curry is the man who was appointed in 1903 to the Upper House on the Finance Minister's recommendation without ever having been consulted in the matter. After the order-in-council had been duly signed by the Governor-General and communicated to Mr. Curry, that gentleman intimated that he had never sought the distinction and had no intention of accepting it. The hint was conveyed to him that if he did not wish the seat he should resign and thus permit the Government to choose somebody else in his place. This Mr. Curry declined, however, to do on the ground that he had never accepted in the first place. Now, after two years have sped, the Senate has declared the Senatorship vacant on account of his not having seen fit to attend. The circumstances surrounding this case are unique in the history of the Canadian Parliament.

Daily Intelligencer.

THE WEST AND MR. BORDEN.

The public journals of the West, as a rule have not been able to find any improvement in the so-called "amendment" to Sir Wilfrid's "school clauses" of the so-called autonomy bills. For example, the Winnipeg Tribune (Independent - Liberal), speaks of the amendment and the whole subject in the following terms:

"The amended measure in principle is not a compromise. It carries out to the fullest extent the original idea of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick to interfere in an unwarranted degree with the provincial right in the matter of education. The position taken by Premier Haultain, representing the territory concerned was that the provinces should be left to deal with the subject exclusively, subject to the provisions of the British North America Act, thus putting them on the same footing in this regard as all the other provinces in the Dominion, except Ontario and Quebec.

"Mr. Haultain demanded on behalf of the Territories that the same terms—no others—imposed by the Queen in Council on the admission of Prince Edward Island and British Columbia be prescribed in this instance. To impose more or to prescribe less, would be submitted, be equally contrary to the law and constitution. Mr. Sifton and the western 'Liberals,' in reply to this demand answer with the coercive amendments, interfering with provincial rights and fastening Separate Schools on the Territories for all time to come.

"The amended clauses framed by the Laurier-Sifton committee ride roughshod over the constitution and provincial rights.

"The plain fact of the matter is Quebec demanded this legislation for the new Provinces. The question of the constitution, the question of right or wrong, did not apparently enter into the consideration of the decision arrived at by Sir Wilfrid, Mr. Sifton and their following.

"The appeal of the West to leave the subject to the provincial legislatures subject to the general constitutional provisions in that regard has fallen on deaf ears.

"The position of Sir Wilfrid and Mr. Sifton is now clear. We are told their following has been canvassed and lined up.

"The question is will the people of Canada swallow the pill, which in the amended clauses, is not even coated.

"The people now turn to the Opposition, led by Mr. Borden. The Conservative leader has the opportunity of a lifetime. It lies within his power to baulk this vicious legislation interfering with provincial rights.

"We are daily reminded by the chief organ of the Liberal party that 'the subject who is truly loyal to the chief magistrate will neither advise nor submit to arbitrary measures,' and this would seem to be a time when the people of Canada should not submit to the arbitrary legislation proposed at Ottawa by men who have shown themselves absolutely devoid of principle."

The Tribune, and the people of the West generally, will be glad to note that Mr. Borden has not failed in any particular in performing his whole duty on this subject. In his great and notable speech on the motion for the second reading of the Autonomy bills, Mr. Borden was as sound and solid on the constitutional question as any champion of Provincial rights and autonomy in the West can be, and in the opinion of independent judges, Mr. Borden's speech was more than a match for Sir Wilfrid's and Mr. Fielding's combined.

Talking about a free bay bridge, it might be as well for the Board of Trade, at its next meeting to discuss another phase of the farmer question. What sense is there in our merchants separating themselves from their good money, to provide a free bay bridge and get the Prince Edward farmers here, when the evil-smelling automobilers, whose horses try to climb trees and making the farmers afraid to come? There's a point worth thinking about.

• • •

It might not, and possibly does not, lie within the province of the Council to do it, but it would be a good thing if automobiles were forbidden the use of the city streets on market days, at least until after a certain hour in the afternoon. It seems to us that in the above remarks there is a point for the City Council and Board of Trade. SOME SENSIBLE TALK.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

It is the habit of some of the smaller cities and towns to conceal the fact when a case of smallpox is discovered in their "midst." The idea is that smallpox is a dreadful disease and that its presence in a town keeps outside people away from the place, to the detriment of business. But smallpox is not half as deadly as many diseases which create no anxiety, and it is not difficult to prevent its spread. In Hamilton, when smallpox is discovered, the victim is taken to the isolation hospital, where he is cured without danger to other people. The newspapers announce the fact, and everything goes on as usual.

Sickened by the purple flow,
Of the earth's most precious blood

All humanity cried, "Cease!"
And the world said, "This is Peace!"
"This is Peace:" the thoughtless cried.
Came again the crimson tide,
Came again the clash of steel,
Came the dungeon and the wheel,
Came again the gory field.

WAS A QUESTION OF AMENS

CHURCH ORGANIST SUPPLIED TOO FEW AT SERVICES.

London, March 30. — The Daily Chronicle publishes the following: The schoolmistress of Shelton, Newark, is offering stubborn resistance to the Vicar, the squire, and the school managers, who have requested her to give up possession of the furnished schoolhouse. The trouble began over differences regarding the church services. Miss Aspinall, the schoolmistress, is also the parish organist, and it is said that she did not supply enough "amens" at the services, because in certain places "amens" had not been sung or chanted before the appointment of the present Vicar, the Rev. William Walker, D.D.

Notice was given to her to end her engagement as teacher and organist, but as the notice was not sanctioned by the Nottinghamshire Education Committee, she treated it as irregular, and declined to accept her dismissal.

On this refusal, it is said, the Vicar called on the parents and discussed the situation with them. A few days later all the children were kept away from the school, and when the school had been closed for three days a new mistress was installed—by the County Council, it was said.

As Miss Aspinall refused to give up possession of the schoolhouse, an ejectment order was applied for from the County Magistrates at Newark, and one day last week, when she was at a church service, one of the school managers and two men from a local farm blocked up the chimney of the schoolhouse and fastened the back door by chain and staple.

Then the police called on the mistress to clear out quietly, but she declined to do so. Being prevented from having a fire in the house, she removed her belongings to a disused cottage opposite, belonging to the squire, Colonel Vere Wright, and this she has barricaded in preparation for a siege. She still keeps possession of the keys of the schoolhouse, and sleeps there every night, and she declares that she will continue to hold it until she receives proper notice of dismissal or three months' salary.

Indigestion?

I OFFER ALL STOMACH SUFFERERS A FULL DOLLAR'S WORTH OF MY REMEDY FREE TO TRY.

I can afford to offer a full dollar's worth free because mine is no ordinary remedy. Ordinary remedies treat symptoms. My remedy treats the causes that produce the symptoms. Symptom treatment must be kept up forever—as long as the cause is there. My treatment may be stopped as soon as it has removed the cause, for that is always the end of trouble.

Stomach trouble is not really a sickness, but a symptom. It is a symptom that a certain set of nerves is ailing. Not the voluntary nerves that enable you to walk and talk and act—but the automatic stomach nerves over which your mind has no control.

I have not room here to explain how these tender, tiny nerves control and operate the stomach. How worry breaks them down and causes indigestion. How misuse wears them out and causes dyspepsia. How neglect may bring on kidney, heart and other troubles through sympathy. I have not room to explain how these nerves may be reached and strengthened and vitalized and made well by a remedy I spent thirty years in perfecting—now known by druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I have not room to explain how this remedy by removing the cause, puts a certain end to indigestion, belching, heartburn, insomnia, nervousness, dyspepsia. All of these things are fully explained in the book I will send you when you write.

In more than a million homes my remedy is known. It has cured stomach troubles, not once, but repeatedly—over and over again. Yet you may not have heard of it—or hearing, may have delayed or doubted. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send me no money—make me no promise—take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have not tried my remedy, I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle—not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. The druggist will require no conditions. He will accept my offer as cheerfully as though your dollar laid before him. He will send the bill to me.

Will you accept this opportunity to learn at my expense absolutely, how to be rid forever of all forms of stomach troubles—to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write today.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

He is a native of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, and is said to have arrived in Australia as a canvasser for an American publishing house. He liked the country, settled there, became a naturalized British subject, was returned to the South Australian Parliament, filled various Ministerial offices, and ultimately reached the Premiership.

THE HOME GARDEN.

LEADING VARIETIES OF VEGETABLES AND METHODS OF CULTIVATION.

At this season of the year the question of farmers' gardens comes up. Too often the arrangements for the making of the home garden are neglected till too late, and especially is this so in regard to the ordering of the seeds. It frequently occurs that it is necessary to order some varieties of seeds from a distance and, therefore, it is well to decide early what varieties are to be planted. The following list of varieties of vegetables has been prepared with a view to aiding in the choice of kinds suitable for the home garden, and very brief culture notes have been appended to each.

Asparagus — Conover's Colossal and Palmetto.

Plant in rows, four feet apart, and two feet apart in the rows; apply manure liberally and cultivate thoroughly.

Beans—Summer, Golden Wax, autumn, Burpee's Bush Lima; Winter, Navy.

Sow when danger of spring frost is past.

Beets — Globe, Egyptian Turnip, Long, Long Smooth Blood.

Sow as soon as ground is fit to work. Thin when small to three inches apart, and take out every other one as soon as they are large enough to use.

Carrots — Chantenay and Scarlet Nantes.

Sow early and thin the same as beets.

Cabbage — Early, Winningstadt; late, Flat Dutch and Savoy, Red Mammoth Rock.

Sow seed of early variety in hot bed about the middle of March, and transplant to open ground about end of April. Sow seeds of late varieties in the open ground about the end of May, and transplant about the first of July.

Cauliflower — Extra Early Erfurt and Early Snowball. Treat the same as cabbage.

Celery — Dairy, White Plume; medium, Paris, Golden Yellow; late, Giant Pascal.

Sow seed in seed box or hot bed about 1st of May. Prick out into flats or cold frame when about an inch high, and transplant into trenches four or five feet apart about 1st of July.

Corn—Early, Golden Bantam, and White Cory; medium, Metropolitan, late, Country Gentleman and Stowell's Evergreen.

Sow about the first of May, and if plants are injured by cold or frosts, sow again about the 24th of May.

Cucumber — For slicing, White Spine; for pickling and slicing, Cool and Crisp.

Sow in hills about four feet apart when danger of frost is over.

Lettuce—Toronto Gem and California Cream Butter.

Sow seed as early as possible and at intervals of one month for succession of crops. Thin plants to six or eight inches apart to secure good heads.

Muskmelon—Rocky Ford or Emerald Gem and Montreal Market.

Sow seed in enriched and well prepared soil, when danger of frost is past. Hills should be five or six feet apart.

Onions — Yellow Danvers, Prizetaker and Red Weathersfield.

Sow seed as early as possible. The thinnings may be used as green onions.

Parsnips—Hollow Crown.

Sow as early as possible and thin to six inches apart in row. Leave part of the crop in ground over the winter for spring use.

Peas—Early, Steele Briggs' Extra Early, medium, Gradus, late, Champion of England.

Sow early kinds as early as possible, and others at intervals of two weeks to obtain succession of crops.

Potatoes—Early, Early Ohio, late, Empire State.

Keep potatoes for early planting in a warm room in the light for three weeks before planting. Plant a few for early use as soon as the ground is fit to work, and follow with others when danger of frost is past. Plant late varieties about the 24th of May.

Rhubarb—Victoria, or any carefully selected seedling variety.

Plant four feet apart. Manure liberally, cultivate thoroughly, and break out seed stalks as they appear.

Salsify—Long White.

Sow as early as possible and thin to four inches apart in the row. Part of the crop may be left in the ground over winter for spring use.

Squash — Summer, Crookneck, and White Bush Scallop, Winter, Hubbard.

Do not plant until danger of the spring frost is over. Bush variety requires about four feet of space between hills; Hubbard should have at least eight feet.

Tomatoes — Early, Earliana, Dominion Day and Mayflower.

Sow seed in seed box or hot bed about the middle of April. Transplant in the open when danger of frost is past.

Watermelon—Hungarian Honey or Cole's Early.

Plant when danger of frost is past, in well prepared hills, eight feet apart.

DESTROY THE CAUSE.

You Cannot Cure Dandruff Without Detroying the Cause of It.

Many people wash their scalps Saturday night or Sunday to try to keep the dandruff down for the week, but on Monday night the scalp has begun to itch, and Tuesday morning will find a good supply of dandruff when the hair is brushed. There is but one real scientific way of curing dandruff; and that is to kill the germ that causes it, and falling hair, and finally baldness. There is only one preparation that will destroy the germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It is an entirely new discovery and the only hair preparation that is based on the new scientific principle. In addition Herpicide is a very refreshing hair dressing for regular toilet use. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. STORIES FOR THE LADIES

SYMPTOMS OF LOVE.

When a man is in love, not only is he quite ready to acknowledge the fact to himself, but he is, in fact, sublimely indifferent as to the whole world knowing of his happy state of mind.

When a girl is in love she guards the knowledge from herself as carefully as from outsiders, and would die sooner than betray her feelings.

A man would never dream of telling his friends that he did not like the girl he was falling in love with.

A girl will go to infinite pains to convince others that she does not like the man whom in her inmost heart she knows she is learning to love.

Man is much more selfish over his love than woman.

During courtship a girl probably resents the presence of others quite as much as does the man, but she at least has the grace to hide her sentiments.

The man frankly shows the intruder that he is unwelcome.

A girl will sacrifice everything for the man she loves.

A man will sacrifice everything and everybody but himself.

A girl rarely wearies of her lover's jealousy, while a man can be bored to death by the jealousy of his sweetheart.

A man will put just as much ardor into the pursuit of a girl whom he has no idea of asking to marry him as he will when he really means business.

When a girl loves all other interests are subservient to her love, no matter what she may be engaged in; there is always a running accompaniment in her heart of love, love, love.

With a man it is quite different. While he is with the girl he loves his thoughts are all of her, but once he is away from her he can become absorbed in a dozen other things. Business, sport, another girl—there is no end to the many tangents his interest may fly off at.

A girl goes through a thousand agonies of mind, wondering if she will be able to hold his love. She detects the first faint lessening of his interest almost before he does.

Whether he is more obtruse or more conceited I do not know, but a man is never as quick as a woman to notice the little ups and downs of love's barometer.

When a woman's love is on the wane it is possible to revive it by stimulating her jealousy or wooing her in some way untried before.

But when a man's love begins to wane it is as good as gone. The chances are ten to one that his roving fancy has been caught by some new face.

He can't help it; "human love is not the growth of human will," and man is by nature inconstant.

A woman who really loves her husband is never in the slightest degree interested in another man.

But there are very few men, no matter how deeply they may love their wives, who will resist the temptation to flirt with another woman should a fitting opportunity occur.

It is simply that men and women look at love from entirely different points of view

"Man's love is of man's life a thing apart; 'tis woman's whole existence."

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

A Subtle Rebuke.

The late high-minded Christian. Dean Hole, tells the story of a North Country clergyman's rebuke of certain of his parishioners who rarely if ever attended church, thinking they made up for it by the regular attendance of their wives. He related how one of these husbands came to the gate of Paradise, and St. Peter, who stood there with the keys rather roughly inquired, "Who are you?" "Oh, St. Peter, I'm Mr. Smith from Newcastle-on-Tyne." "I don't know you." "Oh, if you please, St. Peter, I'm the husband of Mrs. Smith who went regularly to church, and taught in the Sunday School and was kind to the poor." "Why did you not do likewise?" "Oh, St. Peter, I was in business all the week and very tired on Sunday, and I thought if Mrs. Smith went to church regularly it would do for both of us." "Your wife," said St. Peter, "was a true, faithful Christian. She came to these gates three years ago, and she has gone in—for both of you!" Dean Hole knew that distinguished divine, Dean Ramsay, who told him, as of course he would, many marvelous stories of the familiarity of certain ministers in their addresses to the Almighty. One of them was that of a supplication made for fair weather by a minister in a season of storm and tempest: "Noo, Lord, Ye'll nae send us a roaring, tearing wund, but Ye'll send us a nice gentle wind. . . . ." Here there was a terrible gust that dislodged some of the tiles from the roof that were seen through the windows as they fell. The unhappy minister beheld the catastrophe with dismay and bewilderment, and on looking upward exclaimed reproachfully, "O Lord, this is perfectly ridiculous!"

Most Developed in England.

While the system of identification by the measurements of the head, ears, hands and feet has been developed most in France and has already proved of great value in identifying criminals, the use of finger prints has been most developed in England, and there are now between 70,000 and 80,000 finger print records in Scotland Yard, London, and last year 3,642 identifications were made there by this system. —Independent

ORIGIN OF WHIST.

The Game Was First Called Triumph and Afterward Trump.

Whist was first called triumph, a name which was afterward corrupted into trump. The eighteenth century saw whist in its primitive form, the whole object of the game being to win tricks by leading high cards or by trumping. Then came the era of Hoyle, which may be said to have lasted from 1730 to 1860 and taught players to think not only of their own hands, but of the other hands also, and to take advantage of the positions of the cards in them. Hoyle also taught that trumps might be more profitably employed than in simple trumping and showed that they might be used to disarm the adversary and to obtain secondary advantage in trick making by other suits of less apparent power. It was not until 1860 that the philosophical era can be said to have begun, and the origin of the new movement was a knot of young men at Cambridge, England, known as the Little Whist school. This body kept records of its games, but no one thought of making the data known until 1861. Coherence in the system of play was still wanting, and this was supplied in 1864 with Dr. Pole's essay on the theory of the modern scientific whist.

THE ART OF EATING.

Food Must Please the Mind as Well as the Palate.

Pawlow has established the physiological importance of the mental state on digestion, having shown, for instance, that delicacies produce secretion of gastric juice as soon as they are perceived by the eye, even before they are eaten.

The food must not only be palatable, but must be served in an attractive manner—fine dishes, table decorations, etc.

In eating we must take time to chew our food thoroughly. This serves a double purpose—first, through the act of mastication the coarser particles of food are broken up; second, more saliva is secreted and is thoroughly mixed with the food. The digestion of starch is thus materially aided, and the proteids are made more easily accessible to the action of the gastric juice.

Water should accompany each meal. It increases the appetite and the enjoyment of food.

After eating we should rest a little while before returning to our work.—L. Max Einhorn in Medical Record.

A DIFFICULT PENANCE.

Irish Pilgrims to the Skellig Rocks Risk Their Lives.

Ten miles off the coast of Kerry, in the west of Ireland, lie the Skellig rocks, one of which has been for years the scene of a difficult penance. A zigzag path leads up some 700 feet to a lighthouse, but 700 feet more must be climbed before the summit is reached, where stand the ruins of St. Finian's monastery and a cross of St. Michael.

Here on the anniversary of St. Michael devotees risk their lives in performing their devotions. First they have to squeeze themselves through the Needle's Eye, a tunnel in the rock thirteen feet long, the passing up which is like the ascent of a chimney. Then they creep on all fours up the Stone of Pain, on whose smooth surface one false step is fatal; then, getting astride the Spindle, a rock 1,500 feet above the Atlantic and projecting some ten feet, each pilgrim must "ride a cock horse to St. Michael's cross," say a Paternoster and shuffle back as best he can.

Hams.

A mother sent her twelve-year-old daughter to the pork butcher with money to purchase a ham. "Tell Mr. — that I want a ham exactly like the last two I bought," she said, and when the little lady arrived at the shop she delivered the message thus: "Mr. —, mamma says she wants another ham off the same hog as the last two she bought." How many of us wish that when we accidently pick up a first rate ham the same hog could keep on producing its like for time and eternity! As the butcher says: "Hams run peculiarly. We may have 'em all fine for a month or two; then they suddenly get tough and dry and hard and altogether disappointing."

Antiquity of Brewing.

The ancient Egyptians understood and practised the art of brewing several centuries before the Christian era, as did also the ancient Greeks. Spaniards and Britons made a fermented drink from wheat, which was used in Spain under the name ceria, and also in Gaul. Tacitus tells us that in his day, about 100 A. D., beer was the common beverage and that the Germans understood how to convert barley into malt. Six hundred years later Charlemagne gave orders that the best brewers should always accompany his court.

A Continuous Round.

"Blivens seems very proud of the fact that he has a bank account."

"Yes; it has developed him into a financier of the continuous type."

"How is that?"

"He checks his money out just for the pleasure of putting it back again."

A "Practical" Wedding Gift.

Pearl—Oh, we had a delightful wedding and received so many silver presents. Ruby—That was fine. And did your father give something in silver too? Pearl—No; he gave us a bottle of acid to test the other presents with.

TIMELY TOPICS.

To-morrow will be the 1st of April, and by jiggers I just imagine how we would all split our sides with laughter—

If we come down town to-morrow morning and found that the Street Surveyor had cleaned Front St.

If the first sod was turned for the new drill shed.

If Jerry Hurley applied for a patent on his new minnow cans.

If all the doctors in town were given a ticket of leave to the Hospital.

If Mr. J. K. McCargar was presented with a Sunday School book for giving up his job during Lent.

If all the Grit lawyers in town were made judges.

If Yankee Curtis took the Council up for a trip in his new flying machine.

If some "real maple sugar" came on the market to-morrow.

I thought, yesterday, that the man on the next block was rather hasty when he soaked his overcoat. Spring weather is changeable.

A Harrisburg, Pa., man recently died. His will was brief, but has been declared valid by the probate court. It read: "When my wife's a widow; of me bereft, she shall inherit what I have left. And when she's finished her career, it then shall go to my daughter dear."

The following from the London Express is well put:

"It is a pitiable spectacle which Russia, in this her darkest hour, presents to the world, but the world, will not be inclined to waste much compassion on the vaunted colossus of the north. The one thing human nature cannot forgive is successful deception and Russia has bluffed the world with great advantage to herself for many years past. The supposed invincibility of Russia was a powerful factor in diplomacy and a sacred belief of the man in the street. At Russia's whisper the earth trembled and the knees of the nations shook. At her lordly command we scuttled out of Port Arthur; at a hint of her susceptibility we balked the brilliant work of Colonel Younghusband; and now she lies at the mercy of Japan, discredited abroad, torn by dissension at home, impoverished, beaten, and contemptuously pitied by those to whom her least word used to be a law in itself."

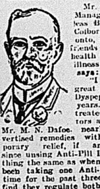
A TORONTO MAN TRIES

SOMETHING NEW AND IS DELIGHTED — FEELS LIKE A BOY.



Mr. M. N. Dafoe.

Mr. M. N. Dafoe, Manager The Dustless Brush Co., 29 Colborne St., Toronto, is telling his friends how he found health after years of illness and pain. He says:

"I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia for many years. I have been treated by local doctors and have taken nearly all the advertised remedies with only temporary relief, if any at all, but since using Anti-Pill I can eat anything the same as when a boy. I have been taking one Anti-Pill at bedtime for the past three months, and find they regulate both stomach and bowels. My old-time vigor has returned, so that my spirits are buoyant and temper normal. As a result of this unhoped for experience I am in duty bound to give all credit to this wonderful remedy, Anti-Pill."

Every druggist sells Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill, or a sample will be sent free by The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.

The remedy that cured Mr. Dafoe so completely is surely worth a trial.

BROKEN RAIL THE CAUSE

Cars of C.P.R. Colonist Train Went Over An Embankment.

Four of the Coaches Were Ditched and Two Women Were Seriously Hurt—The Train Was Running Twenty-five Miles an Hour, and Many of the Passengers Were Cut and Bruised—Other Accidents.

Fort William, March 31.—The westbound C. P. R. colonist train was derailed at Dryden yesterday morning, owing to a broken rail.

It was running at 25 miles an hour, and four out of the twelve cars went over a 15-foot embankment. Many of the passengers were cut and bruised, and two were seriously injured.

They are: Clara Bailey, of Madoc, Ont., seriously bruised in chest, and Mrs. William Desan, aged 69, Dundalk, Ont., right leg broken.

Others hurt are: Miss Lily Boughard, Talbotville; John and Allan Bailey, Madoc; Daniel Mackay, Whitechurch; James Morris, Kalidar; D. F. Stuart, Ailsa Craig; Mrs. Stuart, Ailsa Craig; William Thom, Sunbridge; R. J. Huff, Wellington; Thos. Calderwood, Brougham; John Langin, Waverton; Edward Lennox, Cornwall; John Bold, Morrisburg; Amie Gibson, Wiarton; Frank Jacobs, Brussels, and T. J. O'Leary, Hastings. The injured are being attended to at Dryden by the local doctor and aid was also sent from Rat Portage.

Girl's Life Crushed Out.

Toronto, March 31.—Marie Goraseo, 117 Edward street, two and a half years old, was killed while playing in the street yesterday afternoon. The child is supposed to have been struck by one of McGill's coal carts. The driver got away quickly, before his name could be taken. The police will locate him to-day. The dead child's little companions could not tell how the fatality occurred.

Fatal Fall of Benjamin Miller.

Toronto, March 31.—Benjamin Miller, who had his skull fractured by a fall from the fourth storey of the Gutta Percha and Rubber Co.'s building on O'Hara avenue, yesterday afternoon, died at Grace Hospital at 3.30 yesterday morning.

Lily Mulvaney is Dead.

Toronto, March 31.—Miss Lily Mulvaney, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Alexander Mulvaney, who was terribly injured by being struck by a Queen street car last Thursday evening, died at the Emergency Hospital at 1.35 yesterday afternoon.

Bell Lineman Killed.

Niagara Falls, March 31.—Daniel McKinnon, lineman for the Bell Telephone Co. in this city, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon while engaged in stringing a telephone line into a house on Ferry street.

Her Narrow Escape.

Peterboro, March 31.—Miss Minnie Wilkins, while employed at a loom in the Colonial Weaving Co.'s factory, had her hair accidentally caught in a loom, and but for the breaking of a belt her scalp would have been torn off. She was painfully injured.

Nearly Lost His Life.

Toronto, March 31.—George Clarke, a farmer living at Concord, York Township, while trying to drive across a branch of the Humber River, near Smithfield, in Etobicoke Township, nearly lost his life on Tuesday night. The stream was flooded and the force overturned the buggy. The horse was drowned, but Clarke managed to reach the bank, where he lay unconscious 16 hours before he was found. He is in a serious condition at the home of Colin Cameron.

Killed But Saved Comrade.

New York, March 31.—Fireman Samuel Lillie and several other firemen were injured by a cave-in in the subway at the 168th street station, which was burned yesterday. Lillie and four others had been sent into the tunnel to wet down the smouldering embers of the fire when a portion of the roof fell. Lillie lost his life in saving the life of one of his companions.

Three Men Killed in Explosion.

Huntington, W. Va., March 31.—Three men were killed and one fatally injured by the explosion of a boiler at a sawmill near Matwan yesterday.

RAVED LIKE A MADMAN.

Robert Quick, Who Strangled His Brother, in Court at London.

London, March 31.—Robert Quick, the Caradoc farmer, who strangled his brother Alfred, while in a religious frenzy on Saturday night last, had his preliminary trial here yesterday morning, the hearing not being concluded, however.

William D. Bolton, a neighbor, gave evidence indicating that the prisoner was insane previous to the tragedy, and the prisoner's ten-year-old son told a graphic story of the crime. His father, he declared, had told him immediately following the death of his uncle, that he knew he had done wrong and would be hung.

The prisoner raved like a madman during the sitting of the court.

John Follinsbee, for the defence, has written the Attorney-General, asking whether the legal proceedings cannot be cut short in order that the prisoner may be placed in the asylum.

Mr. McKillop, crown prosecutor, says that, according to law, Quick will have to face the jury in April.

Lord Told Her Not To.

Hamilton, March 31.—Ralph Moore, 90 Earl street, a retired bricklayer and mason, was found dead in bed yesterday afternoon. The doctors say that he had been dead 24 hours before he was found, although his wife and daughter lived with him. His wife is 90 years of age and is blind and the daughter is 45 years of age. The daughter gave him a cup of tea Tuesday night, and then did not go near him till yesterday. When asked the reason for this strange conduct she said that the Lord had told her not to. Coroner McNicholl opened an inquest last evening.

A Medicine Chest in itself.— Only the well-to-do can afford to possess a medicine chest, but Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, which is a medicine chest in itself, being a remedy for rheumatism, lumbago, sore throat, colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma and a potent healer for wounds, cuts, bruises, sprains, etc., is within the reach of the poorest, owing to its cheapness. It should be in every house.

Opportunity makes some men, while other men make opportunity.

A Carefully Prepared Pill. — Much time and attention were expended in the experimenting with the ingredients that enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills before they were brought to the stage in which they were first offered to the public. Whatever other pills may be, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of much expert study, and all persons suffering from dyspepsia or disordered liver and kidneys may confidently accept them as being what they are represented to be.

One needs a good memory in order to be a circumspect forgetter.

A Successful Medicine.— Everyone wishes to be successful in any undertaking in which he may engage. It is, therefore, extremely gratifying to the proprietors of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to know that their efforts to compound a medicine which would prove a blessing to mankind have been successful beyond their expectations. The endorsation of these pills by the public is a guarantee that a pill has been produced which will fulfil everything claimed for it.

Some men are so fortunate that they wouldn't know good luck if they should chance to meet it.

The greater the irritation in the throat the more distressing the cough becomes. Coughing is the effort of Nature to expel this irritating substance from the air passages. Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will heal the inflamed parts, which exude mucous, and restore them to a healthy state, the cough disappearing under the curative effects of the medicine. It is pleasant to the taste, and the price, 25 cents, is within the reach of all.

Some girls seem to think more of a man who can buy a diamond ring than they do of one who can pay a grocery bill.

The healthy glow disappearing from the cheek and moaning and restlessness at night are sure symptoms of worms in children. Do not fail to get a bottle of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator; it is an effectual medicine.

Many a man might go through the world with a reputation for sagacity if it were not for his habit of talking.

Are your corns harder to remove than those that others have had? Have they not had the same kind? Have they not been cured by using Holloway's Corn Cure? Try a bottle.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Linked by Fate

the island, conceived the idea of 'repaying' us for some imaginary kindness on our part—quite imaginary."

"It was like her," murmured Vane.

"What did you say?"

"Nothing. I was speaking to myself; a bad habit I have acquired through having no one else to speak to."

"Miss Wood was cast ashore here from the wreck of the Alpina," resumed Sutcombe. "Her experiences must have been painful, so painful, indeed, that she has never spoken of them."

Vane's head drooped. He was disappointed. Painful, indeed, seeing that she had never mentioned his name, for if she had done so Lord Sutcombe would have known that "Richard Mortimer" was a false one. It was evident that she still disliked him, still regarded her forced marriage with regret and resentment. He stifled a sigh.

"Thank you," he said. "I wish I could be as candid as you have been, Lord Sutcombe, but my lips are closed. I will go on board and set sail presently, and, as I told you, I shall not return to the island." He paused a moment, then he said: "We both rather played the giddy goat just now. Like a couple of schoolboys, eh, Lord Sutcombe? Just as well, perhaps, if we confined the knowledge of that absurd little scene to ourselves?" Sutcombe regarded him silently and Vane went on: "If you think you got the better of the business you can equalize matters by promising that you will not tell—the ladies anything of the affair, or of my presence on the island."

Sutcombe considered for a moment or two.

"I will—on one condition," he said. "That you give me your word of honor that the lady I call Miss Wood has no cause of complaint against you."

Vane looked surprised. "I assent to your condition, Lord Sutcombe. She has none. I have not willingly injured the lady in word or thought or deed. There is my hand on it!"

Sutcombe took it and nodded gravely.

"There is some mystery which I cannot solve," he said in a low voice. "But I believe you and trust you. But you cannot sail at once, you are not fit. The risk—oh, it is impossible! Remain here until to-morrow. I will come about noon, and if I find that you are well enough—well!" he shrugged his shoulders.

After a while Vane reluctantly agreed to the arrangement.

"Now, I don't want to seem inhospitable," he said, "but isn't it time you got back to the ladies? They will be anxious about you."

When Sutcombe had gone Vane sat with his chin on his hands, gazing before him; the bitterness that welled up in his heart reflected in his eyes.

He thought he saw it all so plainly. This man, with the frank blue eyes and pleasant manner, was evidently in love with Nina, and she—of course she returned his love. Why not? Was he not the sort of young fellow any girl might love? And he, Vane, stood between them; in short, barred their happiness and wrecked their lives. It was the irony of fate that he should be doomed to be the marplot, the obstacle to other persons' happiness. He had stood between Julian and the Lesborough peerage; he had stood between Julian and Judith. But he had, by the aid of Chance, effaced himself in their case. Could he not efface himself in this one? Why not? He pondered, with an increasing bitterness, for hours, and at last he arrived at something like a decision. He still felt faint with the loss of blood, and very tired, and lying down, with his arm for a pillow, he fell asleep.

Sutcombe had promised to return by five, but he did not arrive, and as the half hours dragged on with no sight of him, the girls, Vivienne especially, grew uneasy.

"Do you think anything could have happened to him?" she said anxiously. "He is usually so careful not to be late, knowing that we should be alarmed. Think of him all alone there, dear!"

"I don't think anything has happened to him," said Nina; but I will soon find out."

"Decima! You wouldn't go out there alone!" exclaimed Vivienne fearfully and yet half wistfully.

"Why not?" said Nina, with a smile. "I have often been as far on the island alone, and I am not afraid; indeed, there is nothing to be afraid of. We three are alone here, and there are no animals more wild than the ducks and the poor turtles. Of course I shall go—no, you could not come, it would be too far. I shall probably meet Lord Sutcombe close at home. Don't let the stew burn while I am away!" she added with a laugh as she left the saloon.

She walked quickly toward the valley, and would have met Sutcombe if he had been returning from the spot at which he had been working, but he was coming from the direction of the coast, and so she missed him. When she reached the working and found that he was not there, she felt rather alarmed. She stood looking round her anxiously, and saw the footmarks leading in the direction of the beach. Still more anxious, she followed them for some distance, and presently, to her amazement, caught sight of the yawl. She stopped dead short, her heart beating rapidly. What did it mean? Evidently some persons had discovered the island and had come upon Lord Sutcombe! Had they taken him away with them, or had he gone of his own accord? It would be of no use going back to alarm Vivienne; she, Nina, must learn what had become of Lord Sutcombe before she did anything else.

Keeping behind the boulders as much as possible, she approached the yawl and was amazed at finding no sign of life about it. After a time she plucked up courage and stole towards it, her eyes fixed upon it, so that she came quite suddenly and unprepared upon the figure lying full length upon the ground.

She uttered a cry and sprang back, her eyes distending with fear, her breath coming painfully. The man was asleep, his face half hidden in his arms; but there seemed to her something familiar in the figure, and with her heart throbbing like a steam engine, she stole nearer and nearer. Then she saw him distinctly, and the throbbing seemed to cease suddenly and a mist swam before her terrified eyes.

It was Vane Mannering.

For a moment or two she thought that her senses had played her false, that she was the victim of a delusion born of her constant dwelling upon him and some similarity in the sleeping man to the man she loved; but as she crept nearer still and bent over him, she saw that it was indeed Vane.

In an instant Time became a thing of naught and was destroyed, and she was back to that other night long ago when she had bent over him in the saloon; and, waking, he had caught her by the arm and hurt her in his fierce grasp; but as swiftly the present returned to her, and all that had happened since that night yawned like a gulf between.

Then, as she looked, she saw the empty sleeve, the blood-stained bandage on the shoulder, and a thrill of alarm, of pity, ran through her. Vane here, and wounded! Why had he come? What fate had drifted him back to the island and thrown him, so to speak, at her feet? Why had he come? Why had he left the woman he loved, the beautiful woman she had seen in the box at the theatre, the "Judith" whose portrait he had carried next his heart? Had he come in search of her, Nina? Had he come because the memories of the island had haunted him as they had haunted her?

The blood ran warmly and swiftly through her veins and rose to her face. For a moment she hugged the thought to her bosom, and her heart beat with something that was like happiness. The desire to look into his eyes, to hear him speak, assailed her irresistibly. She bent still lower and touched his forehead with her lips, then drew back, breathless and expectant, half fearful, half hopeful.

Light as the touch of her lips had been, the pressure of a thistledown only, it awoke him. He opened his eyes, with a vague and dazed expression in them at first; then, as full consciousness came back to him, he stared at her with a perplexed frown as if he could not believe that it was really her.

The next instant he was on his feet, her name on his lips.

"Nina!"

She stood, her hands clasped but ready to be thrown round his neck, her figure standing upright, but as ready to fall on his breast. And, indeed, he did extend his arms as if to take to him, did take a step towards her; then, as if some thought, some remembrance, had thrust itself upon him, he stopped short, and his arms fell to his sides, and, instead of words of love, of endearment, which would have brought her to him never to be put away from him again, came the hoarse, broken words, like the dropping of icicles on her expectant spirit, longing for a softer tone, a loving word:

"I—I am glad you are here. I wanted to see you—speak to you!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

Nina stood with her hands clasped tightly, her eyes fixed on Vane waitingly, and under their regard his courage almost failed him, the longing to take her in his arms well nigh mastered him. But he thought of Sutcombe, the man who loved her, the man whom she doubtless loved, and he found his voice at last. It sounded harsh and hard in his own ears; how much more so, then, in hers!

"This—this is a strange meeting," he said. "The gentleman who came with you has just left me—"

She shot a quick glance of alarm at his shoulder; a glance which, of course, Vane misinterpreted.

"An accident," he said. "A mere trifle. Lord Sutcombe is not hurt."

The color flooded her face, and she drew a long breath of relief—of relief on Sutcombe's account, Vane thought, bitterly.

"He has told me how you happened to come here. I am glad you have done so, glad he should have the gold. Indeed, it is yours to do what you like with. But that's nothing! To me the all important fact is, of course, that you should be alive. I have sought for you—" He checked himself; for he felt he should melt and his resolution break down if he dwelt on the past, the days that had passed since they had parted. "Will you tell me how you were saved? How fate has dealt with you? I'm—I'm naturally curious," he added, with a smile from which he tried hard to keep the bitterness.

Nina obeyed, speaking almost mechanically. The dream, the hope, which had illumined her spirit as she bent over him had vanished, and left her heart an aching void.

He listened, with his eyes on the ground, keeping from his face every sign of the emotions that thrilled him at her story. She had been struggling with poverty while he had been burdened by the wealth that was useless to him without her! When she had finished she stood and waited. She did not ask him for an account of his life since they had parted. He noticed this, and again misunderstood.

"Thank God, hard times are over for you!" he said, fervently. "You are well? But—but—not happy, Nina?"

She looked at him, an eloquent glance, but his eyes were fixed on the ground and he did not see it.

"Perhaps—perhaps I can guess the cause—and remove it," he said, grimly. "May I speak quite candidly? Oh, what is the use of our beating about the bush! We are both thinking of what happened on this island. You were the victim of a cruel fate, Nina, a fate I appreciated. I—I strove to avert. You will do me the justice to acknowledge that, won't you? But I have kept my promise, the promise you asked of me. No one knows of our—marriage."

She turned her face from him and looked straight before her.

"I, too, have kept my promise," she said, in a low voice.

He nodded. "I knew you would—for your own sake," he said, not at all gratefully. "It was poor Fleming's doing entirely. Mind! I bear him no ill will. He acted according to his lights. And—and, after all, there is no harm done—I mean that it can be undone."

She looked at him for a second and waited.

"Since Lord Sutcombe left me," he went on, "I have been thinking of the—the tie that binds us two, and I've come to the conclusion that it—the marriage—was invalid; anyhow, that it would not stand good unless we were married again."

The blood threatened to rise to her pale face, but she kept it down.

"If you remember, poor Fleming said that we might go through the ceremony again if we escaped from the island, when we got to a port—"

She made the faintest gesture of assent with her hand.

"Therefore, in Heaven's name, why should you be bound to me by so frail and intangible a bond!" he broke out, sharply. "I know how you must long for your freedom; you would do so in any case; but now—"

Her brows knit as if she were trying to understand this.

"And—and I admit that you have the right to be free; that, indeed, it would be a shameful thing to hold you by a chain which fettered you against your will."

She made no sign of assent or dissent, and, stringing himself up to the necessary pitch of self-sacrifice, he went on, huskily:

"Fleming gave you a kind of certificate? You have got it still?"

She made a movement of her hand in the affirmative.

"Well, then," he said, almost savagely, "destroy it."

Her eyes flashed on him for an instant, with surprise and relief, as he thought.

"And the ring. Give it back to me, and—and so cancel our"—he laughed slowly and bitterly—"our agreement. There can be nothing then between you and—your freedom, except the—the ceremony. If that seems to you an obstacle, you can get it removed by a court of law. I—of course, I should not oppose. Lord Sutcombe would be able to help you in that part of the business. He—he is a good fellow; I am sure of that, and he—you—" The words stuck in his throat; he could not go any further.

Nina stood with bent head, her eyes flashing, the blood running fiercely through her veins. He had spoken as if it were her freedom he desired, but was he not craving for his own, that he might be free to marry—Judith? At that moment she saw the portrait as plainly as she had seen it when it had been actually in her hand; and, her heart racked with jealousy and wounded, outraged love, she could utter no word. Suddenly she turned from him and took from her bosom the certificate and the ring that was wrapped in it, and held them out to him.

"There they are," she said, with an unnatural calm.

Vane took them from her outstretched hand and looked at them for a moment as if he saw nothing. Then, without a word, he lit one of the matches Sutcombe had given him and held it to a corner of the paper. But, as he did so, something seemed to catch his breath, and, half choking, he flung the match from him, crushed the certificate and ring in his hand and springing towards her caught her in his arms.

Through a mist of tears she saw his face, white to the lips and stern, almost savage, in its passion. Amazed she struggled faintly in his grasp, but he held her so tightly as almost to crush her.

"No!" he cried, hoarsely. "I won't do it! I can't! You are my wife; do you hear? I don't care whether the ceremony was valid or not, I hold you to it! You are my wife! My wife! Do you understand? You married me for better or for worse; I refuse to release you. I hold you to your vow. I refuse to give you up to any man. Do you understand?"

Her eyes closed, the languor of surrender stole over her; but she fought against it, though the pressure of his arms, the fierce, passionate words were sending the blood surging through her veins in a happy flood. But though she loved him with a love that threatened to sweep away every barrier, she was a woman and not a child, and she remembered. So she held her face from the pillow—his heart—which it craved, and retained possession of her soul.

"Why did you fly from me—risk your life rather than stay with me?" he demanded, masterfully. "Did you dislike me so much? Where you so afraid of me? Could you not trust me? No matter! I don't care to know! You are my wife! I hold you to your vow, your promise. Nina! I love you! I loved you then; I've loved you all the time we've been parted. I love you now, and, by God, I'll hold you! Nothing shall part us!"

Then she spoke the word; reluctantly enough, for love's voice was clamouring to her, "Be satisfied! He loves you."

"Judith!"

He started slightly and stared down into her eyes with amazement and a dawning recollection.

"Judith?" he echoed.

"Yes," she breathed. "I—I found her portrait in your coat pocket. A beautiful, a lovely woman. I saw her in a box at the theatre in London. Yes; Judith!"

He gazed, questioningly, anxiously into her eyes, half dazed for a moment; then he laughed. And the laugh was almost sweeter in her ears than his words of passionate love and longing.

"Judith! Judith Orme! You found her portrait! I had forgotten it; forgotten her!"

The warm blood flooded Nina's face and she drew a long sigh of relief.

"Judith? I thought I was in love with her! In love! I did not know what it meant till I met you, Nina, my dearest, my—wife!" His arms closed round her again. "I had forgotten her! Judith!" he laughed again. "She is going to be married—is married by this time to—to another man! Judith! And you thought—"

Nina's eyes overflowed with the glad tears. Oh, it is well for women that they can weep, even in their joy!

"What else could I think? And—and—you don't care for her now?" she faltered, like any girl in her teens, woman as she was.

He threw back his head and laughed again, the laugh that was such sweet music to her.

"You only, dearest," he said. "And you never guessed it! Ah, well, if you could have seen me when I found you had gone on that infernal raft; if you could have seen me when its remains floated ashore with your cap! The dear little cap! Oh, Nina! I was mad with grief; I have been more than half mad since. All the world could not console me for the loss of you! And all the time you were thinking I was in love with—Judith!"

"Forgive me!" she murmured. "But what else could I think?—her portrait, there in your coat, over your heart!—and, knowing that you had been forced into the marriage—"

"I loved you then, before then!" he said, earnestly. "It was on your account that I hesitated, pleaded with Fleming, made the raft. I thought you disliked me, and I loved you too well to get you against your will."

"How blind we were!" she murmured, regretfully; for how much their blindness had cost them!

"Blind as young puppies! But our eyes are opened now, dearest! It is all right!"

"Your shoulder, your wound— Do you remember the fight with the Lascar?" she whispered, with a shudder.

"Yes, and how gently you dressed the wound; you little guessed how the touch of your dear fingers thrilled through me!" he responded. "My beautiful!" He gazed into her eyes, raised shyly but lovingly to his. "To think of your being a literary swell! A dramatic author! And to think of my looking on at the play, and not knowing that my dear, clever wife had written it! My wife! Nina, you haven't kissed me yet! Kiss me now! Just that I may realize that you are actual flesh and blood, and not one of the visions of you that have come to me so often in my dreams."

She raised her head and kissed him, and did not tell him that she had already done so!

"And now, dearest, touching the future—"

He started at his own words. Future! Why, he had destroyed the future that belonged to her, had given away his birthright, the title, the wealth that should belong to her as his wife! It had been the act of a madman, but—the act had been accomplished, and could not be undone.

She nestled against him and laughed.

"I am too happy in the present to think of the future," she said in a low voice.

"You—you don't mind being the wife of—of a poor man, a man of no account?" he faltered.

She looked at him with surprise. "You forget the gold—Vane!" she said.

The tone of her "Vane" thrilled him.

"Ah, yes, of course!" he responded, with relief. "Yes; yes! I'd forgotten the gold. No wonder, with such a treasure in my arms! We'll go to England, form a company—" He stopped and frowned. How could he go to England, he who had exiled himself from civilization, who was dead to the world, his world. "You—you wouldn't like to stay here?" he suggested, scarcely knowing what to say.

"Anywhere—with you!" she murmured.

Suddenly athwart this dream of happiness came a voice calling, "Decima—Miss Wood!"

Nina started. "Lord Sutcombe!" she whispered almost guiltily.

"Ah, poor Lord Sutcombe!" murmured Vane, gravely. "Yes, I can pity him, Nina! To love you—and lose you! Don't I know what that means!"

Sutcombe came upon them hurriedly and stopped short, looking from one to the other, the color coming and going in his face. Vane made a dash at the revelation.

"Lord Sutcombe—Nina—Miss Wood—we have met—she is my wife!"

Sutcombe started; then he remembered the paper and the ring he had seen Nina weeping over, and realized the truth—and his own absolute, irrevocable loss. He stood for a moment or two quite silent, then he came forward and held out his hand.

"I—I congratulate you," he said, simply, and not even Vane could appreciate the effort, the words, the tone, cost him; but perhaps Nina could.

She laid her hand on his arm and looked up at him through a mist of tears.

"We—we—owe—our happiness to you," she whispered. "But for you I should not have come back to the island—"

Sutcombe patted her hand in silence for a moment, then he said:

"We must go back to my sister; she is anxious."

"Yes, let us go," said Vane.

Sutcombe would have preceded them, but Nina walked resolutely by his side; and so, all together, they came to Vivienne in the saloon. Nina flew to her and hid her face on her bosom, and Vivienne stared over her at the tall, rough-looking man, whose grave face had already the glow of his new found happiness in it.

"Vivienne—oh, Vane, I can't tell her! You!" she broke down.

Vane came forward.

"It is soon told," he said, gently. "This lady to whom you and your brother have been so good—God bless you for it!—and I are husband and wife. We were married on this island a long time ago. My name, her name, is Mannering. I am Vane Mannering—"

He stopped, aghast, at the slip of the tongue, and was more aghast still when he saw the brother and sister exchange glances. He was glad that Nina had—like a good housewife—turned to the fire to see after the supper.

"Vane Mannering!" exclaimed Sutcombe. "Are you related to the Lesborough family? There was a Vane Mannering—the last earl, who perished in a fire at Lesborough Court—"

Vane signed to him warningly, and Sutcombe, embarrassed and speechless, stopped and stared at him. Vivienne made a show of helping Nina, and presently Nina shyly invited them to supper. They sat down, and Vane told the Sutcombes of the wreck, and the story of the marriage, Nina sitting near him with bent head and face that grew hot and pale by turns; and the Sutcombes listened with an amazement which grew still more intense when Vane abruptly said, as if he had suddenly arrived at a decision:

"And now for something else. Just now you asked me if I were connected with the Lesboroughs. I am. I am the man who was supposed to have been killed by the fire at the Court!"

"Supposed! Then—then you are Lord Lesborough!" exclaimed Sutcombe.

Vane stretched out his hand and got Nina's and held it tightly, and looked tenderly and reassuringly into her startled eyes.

"Yes," he admitted gravely. "It is a strange business. Listen!"

Amidst their breathless silence he told them the story of the accident, the sacrifice he had made for Julian.

"What was the use of the title, the estate, to me?" he said, simply. "I had lost Nina forever, as I thought; for even if she were alive, I thought she had risked death rather than remain alive with me. Life was over for me; such a life as that which I should have had to lead was impossible. And Julian would make a ten thousand times better Lord of Lesborough—it was only pushing the clock on a little, I thought! I should never marry—even if I had been free to do so, for, you see, I loved my wife here, wife or no wife. And so I disappeared that Julian Shore might reign in my stead! It wasn't much of a sacrifice; and it was lessened by the fact that the poor soul, the poor deaf and dumb woman, who was so devoted to him, had given her life to save mine. It was some kind of a return, acknowledgment of, her heroism. I could make the master she loved rich and happy. You see? You think I was mad; but—I hadn't found my wife again," and he colored and looked round. "She is my wife, Lord Sutcombe. Tell her so!"

Sutcombe nodded gravely.

"Yes," he said, "I am a barrister, though I've never practiced; and, strangely enough, while I was reading for the bar, I studied the marriage laws. The marriage was legal!"

"Thank you!" said Vane, with his eyes on Nina's face. She rose, and without a word Vivienne and she left the saloon. At the door she paused for an instant and looked at Vane. He had started to his feet, but, before the look in her eyes, he sank down again.

"She is not satisfied," he said, almost inaudibly, as the door closed on them.

Sutcombe shook his head. "It is only natural. You must be married in due form. Though, mind, this one is legal and absolutely valid!"

"But—but—there is another matter," continued Sutcombe. "Do you mind telling me again about the—accident, the fire? It is a painful subject—but I have a reason for asking."

Vane repeated the account of that awful scene in the Wizard's or Witch's Room, and Sutcombe stopped him now and again to ask for some detail; then he said, very gravely:

"And you call it an accident?"

"Certainly!" responded Vane, with surprise. "The poor woman upset the stove, furnace, whatever you call it, and the burning spirit ran over the floor and caught."— He shuddered.

"The fire? Yes, that was an accident," said Sutcombe, still more gravely, his face pale, his eyes fixed earnestly on Vane. "But the fumes which nearly suffocated you? The door was locked—"

"It locked with a spring."

"The ropes of the ventilator gave way in your hands. Your cousin, Mr. Julian Shore, did not return—"

"Good God! What is it you are suggesting?" cried Vane, white to the lips, not only at the suggestion, but at his own vague sense that it might be true.

"Murder," replied Sutcombe.

Vane fell back and regarded him with horror-stricken eyes.

"Murder! Julian—Julian plot, plan my death! Oh, you don't know him! He is incapable of—" The sweat stood thickly on his brow.

Sutcombe looked at him steadily.

"You had never met your cousin before that day at the lawyer's; knew nothing about him," he said. "I know more than you!"

"You!" said Vane.

"Yes; because I have not come under the spell of his presence, that peculiar charm of which you tell us. I, unbiassed, untrammelled by the influence of his personality, can view his actions with a clear judgment. Wait! Think how much he had to gain by your death! A peerage, the estate, the woman he loved!"

"But—but," stammered Vane, eagerly, "I was not in their way! She did not care—I did not care for her. She knew it!"

Sutcombe smiled grimly. "She had cared for you; I am not so sure, from all you tell me, that she did not still care. At any rate, he thought so. You were terribly in his way, Lesborough, and he—tried to remove you! Why did that poor woman come back to that infernal room, and by the other door? She suspected her master, as I suspect, and she came to save you from death and him from—murder!"

Vane sprang to his feet.

"My God!" he cried, "I can't, I won't believe it! I dare not! Julian, my own flesh and blood!"

"More kith than kind!" murmured Sutcombe. "Heaven grant that you may be right and I wrong. But your duty is clear. You must go to England and discover the truth for yourself. Go secretly, concealing your identity—"

"I will!" said Vane, resolutely. "And I'll prove you're wrong! Yes, I'll prove it to your satisfaction. Julian try to—to murder me!" He laughed, but the laugh had a note of dread and doubt in it.

They sat and talked for some time; then Vane said he must go.

"I can't leave the boat; I'm not certain of the tide," he said. "I'll come around to-morrow, and we'll talk it over. Of course, not a word to the ladies!"

They shook hands and parted, but neither slept. Vane lay awake looking up at the stars and thinking of Nina, and Sutcombe paced the saloon and carried on the fight with his disappointment and loss.

Going to the spring quite early the next morning, he was surprised to find Vivienne seated on the beach a little way from the ladies' hut. She beckoned to him, and when he came within hearing held up her finger warningly.

"Hush!" she whispered. "She is asleep. She has been awake all the night, but has just fallen off. We have been talking; she has been telling me everything, and I have been thinking. Sutcombe"—she paused and bit her lip—"you are sure the—the marriage was quite legal?"

"Quite," he said, gravely, and looking away from her.

"Then bend down; I—I want to whisper, Sutcombe."

With her face against his, she whispered something in his ear. He started and drew a long breath, then nodded assentingly.

"Yes!" he said, in a low voice. "We will do it. It—it is a clever idea of yours, Vivienne. How did you come to think of it?"

"I am a woman, dear!" she said. "But you will have to be quick—there is no time to lose."

"I will manage my part, if you will do yours," he said, and he laid his hand on her shoulder. "To see her happy—it is all I ask!"

The tears came to her eyes and she put up her hand and caressed his, with the familiar gesture. It was not necessary for her to say anything.

It was late when Nina awoke—awoke to find that her dream that Vane was restored to her was true!—and Vivienne was standing beside the bed with a cup of tea in her hand.

"You lazy bones!" she said. "We've all had breakfast, and Sutcombe has gone off to his work—how pretty you look when you blush, Decima, for it must be 'Decima' for me, still! At any rate, until I can get used to the 'Nina.' I like the way he says it—Nina, Nina!"

Nina hung her head and blushed all the rosier.

"Mr. Mannering, or, rather, Lord Lesborough, has gone back to the boat to mend a sail, or something of the kind. And Sutcombe says, do you mind making some bags for him this morning? He particularly wants them at once!"

"Why, of course!" said Nina, eagerly. "Give me the stuff! I'll begin them this very moment. Are you sure everything is right in the saloon?" she asked, like a careful housekeeper. "What are you doing?"

"Quite sure!" replied Vivienne. "What am I doing? Oh, only tidying up a little. Shall we take the bags down to the clump of trees in the hollow? Or, perhaps you'd rather stay here, in case he should come!"

Nina jumped up with suspicious promptness.

"Come along; it will be shady there," she said.

They went to the spot of which Vivienne had spoken. It was a little dip in the valley, from which the coast line could not be seen; and as they worked Vivienne enticed Nina into again telling her the strange story of the wreck, and all that had followed it; and they were so absorbed in the recital that, though Nina glanced round occasionally rather wistfully, the morning slipped away. Presently there sounded a step; but Nina's eyes did not brighten; for it was not the one for which she was waiting—and longing. It was Sutcombe.

"Done some the bags? Thank you very much, Lady Lesborough," he said, cheerfully.

Nina started and colored.

"I—I— Oh, you call me that!" she said, half proudly, half doubtfully.

"Yes; it is your name, your title," he said, gravely. "But—but sometimes—often—I shall think of you as Decima."

She held out her hand, and he took it and pressed it.

"Lord Lesborough is busy with the boat," he said. "When you've fin ished the rest of the bags—if you'r not tired of them already—"

"No, no!" she said, with unneces sary earnestness.

—"Perhaps you'd bring them dow to the saloon, if you don't min Vivienne, I want your help for while."

They went off, but when they ha gone a little distance Vivienne pau ed, and, coming back, stooped an kissed Nina. There did not seem an thing in the moment especially ap propriate for the caress; but one w man is never surprised when anothe kisses her, and Nina took it grat fully, and returned it. After th had gone she worked until the la of the remaining bags were finishe then she arose, and, with an unco scious sigh of relief, went towar the saloon. As she did so she loo ed round a little fearfully, and yet little wistfully; but there was one in sight. Nor was there any o in the saloon; and, putting the ba on the table, she went towards t beach. As she reached it she look seaward, and to her surprise saw vessel in the offing. It was t Ariel and she remembered that was the day appointed for its turn. She was gazing at it when was startled by discovering that was going from the island, inst of making towards it. She ran do the beach to the cove where one the Ariel's boats had been anchor and was more than startled to f that it had disappeared. What co it mean? She gazed at the rece vessel for a moment or ran up the beach, calling ne.

Vivienne did not appear, but stalwart figure came swiftly from saloon. It was Vane. She stop short, and, panting, looked from to the Ariel.

"What is the matter? You calling, dearest?" he said.

"Yes!" she responded, anxiou "I was calling Lady Vivienne, can't find her or Lord Sutcom And the Ariel—that is the Ariel ing away from the island!"

He shaded his eyes with his h and looked at it. Then he looke her, a curious expression in his e a dawning joy.

"I found this in the saloon," said, holding out a note; "perhap will explain—"

She took the paper—it was fo in a lover's knot—and, opening read:

"Dear Nina,—Forgive me! It my wicked plot! And mine alone occurred to me while we were tal last night. We have gone fo cruise—for a fortnight—when we come back to see if you are here. But Lord Lesborough has boat, and you may both decide spend the rest of your honeym elsewhere. If we do not find yo will go to England and wait fo in the old rooms at Everleigh C Till then, and as long as I live, I am Yours, VIVIENN

"They've—gone!" he said, in voice. "And—left us alone! my wife!" and the next momen arms were round her and her hidden on his breast.

One morning, a month later, wintry sun stealing faintly thr the blinds of the breakfast roo the Court fell upon the black g figure of Julian, as he sat at table, looking distastefully at good food set out for him. In morning suit of black serge his figure looked thinner than of but just as graceful. His face pale; indeed, looked almost as less as the hands that broke piece of toast on his plate. Be was the post-bag, and every and then he took up a letter, o it and eyed it listlessly, then ped it as listlessly on the table.

"Shall I give you some fresh my lord?" asked Prance, in a dued voice—all the voices at Court had become subdued of since, in fact, the fatal ac which had killed the late earl.

"Eh? Ah, yes, thanks," r Julian. "Is Mr. Holland here?"

"Yes, my lord. He is in th rary with Mr. Tresgider."

(To be continued.)

FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK

ON THE DAY BOAT

By LUCY BARNES

Copyright, 1905, by A. S. Richardson

Margaret was sure that there was something wrong. A sense of the unfitness of things had been growing upon her for full fifteen minutes. Seated in the corner of a big divan on the Albany day boat, she had gradually wakened to the realization that, no matter who passed by, glances furtive and open had been cast in her direction.

Not that this was an unusual attention for Margaret to receive. Glances of admiration had followed her ever since she had passed from spindling girlhood into glorious young womanhood. But these glances were different. The expression in the eyes of the women said quite clearly, "Thank heaven I am not as you are!" The admiration in the eyes of men was mixed unmistakably with pity.

Margaret reached blindly in the direction of her hat. The little bend in the back was squarely above the coil at the nape of the neck. Perhaps it had slipped back too far. She raised her hand and felt of her pompadour. She knew by touch that there was just enough hair showing in the front. It might be soot on the tip of her nose. She drew forth her handkerchief and dabbed the tip of that member, but no spot showed on the cambric. Then she tried her chin and her cheek bones with the same result.

An odious woman, lolling in a patent rocker, smiled at her, but it was a pitying smile. Not for worlds would Margaret have asked that woman what was wrong. And a woman who wore a lace net dress to travel in would not have sense enough to tell another woman what had happened.

By the time Margaret had reached this conclusion she was actually perspiring with nervousness. She was not a girl whose thoughts ran entirely on dress and appearance, but she viewed with scorn the ungroomed woman. And at this moment she was morally certain that her grooming had slipped a cog. She reviled the management of the boat line which did not panel its saloon with mirrors, but not for worlds would she have walked the length of that saloon to a dressing room. She preferred to sit in the limelight of the restless passengers to running the gantlet of the lounging passengers.

She was ready to call herself names for having declined, with thanks, the vanity bag her brother Dick had wanted to give her on her birthday. She had taken a new collar for Pedro. Poor Pedro, grieving in the baggage room in the hold at this moment! What wouldn't she give now for the tiny mirror reposing in the rejected vanity bag?

Just then a young man loomed upon her gloomy mental horizon. The boat had made a landing at one of those small towns from which tourists reached the Catskills. The young man looked exceedingly cheerful and harmless. Margaret decided upon this the instant her troubled glance met his. His eyes were the sort to create a feeling of trust. He was good looking, but Margaret instantly decided that he couldn't be blamed for that. Anyhow, he was looking for somebody, and she became restless. She met his look of inquiry with a nod of invitation and deliberately drew her skirts to one side as if to make room for him on the divan.

The young man accepted the unspoken invitation with alacrity. He stood before her, hat in hand.

"Awfully good of you," he said, looking down at her frankly. "I didn't recognize you at first. You've changed quite a bit since you had that last picture taken."

Margaret gasped. She had thought her own impertinence quite impossible once the die was cast, but this young man's nerve was monumental. She lowered her voice so that the woman in lace net could not hear what she said.

"Sit down, please, and I'll explain. Of course you were not looking for me, I know that. But you—er—play the part much better than I could. I was in such trouble, and I just had to speak to you."

Just for an instant a puzzled expression passed over the man's face. Then he pulled himself together and sat down beside her.

"I am tremendously glad to be of service to any lady in distress. What particular form of distress has overtaken you?"

Margaret looked straight into his trust inspiring eyes, and her own danced.

"I am a victim of woman's 'inhuwomanity' to woman. Don't you dare to laugh when I tell you this, but every woman who has passed me for the last half hour has looked at me as if my hat was crooked or I had soot on my nose or my skirt and blouse had parted company. Will you please tell me what is the matter?"

The young man tried not to give way to the mirth which was welling up within him and looked her over critically.

"Well," he said judiciously, "I can't see anything wrong except that the thing you wear for a collar seems to have slid around. Does the bow belong under your left ear?"

Margaret clutched at the offending bit of ribbon.

"My stock! I never thought of that!"

She pulled the bit of embroidered linen till the bow was poised with outspread, saucy wings, directly under her piquant chin.

"Now, is that right?" she asked, looking up into her human mirror.

"Correct and trim as you please," he said reassuringly and watched her while she fastened the unruly stock with a tiny pearl headed pin.

"You wouldn't believe what a miserable half hour I have put in. I know now that odious old cat in the patent rocker has grinned afresh each time my stock sprang a fresh notch. Isn't it funny that women can't show a little Christian courtesy to each other?"

"Well," said the young chap thoughtfully, "I'm very sorry I didn't get here half an hour sooner. I might have saved you some—er—trifling discomfort."

But that wasn't what his eyes said at all, and Margaret woke with a start to a realization that, after having made use of the young man, it was not going to be easy to get rid of him. But what annoyed her the worst of all was the fact that she felt that she was not particularly anxious to get rid of him. He had put down his bags and settled himself back in his corner of the divan in a way that suggested that he meant to stay until New York was reached.

"Do you believe in signs and omens?" she asked.

"Sure! Something tells me this is going to be an awfully jolly trip. I usually dread the ride into town, but then"—

"Well, when I go home I shall say unpleasant things to the friends who advised me to take the boat trip down the Hudson. Oh, I didn't mean to be personal! I beg your pardon. I was merely referring to the babies and the lunch. I can't sit on the deck because the sight of lunch boxes and perpetual eating makes me positively ill."

"We'll remedy that. I know a little corner where they don't admit either babies or lunch boxes. If you'll just wait a minute I'll fix the matter up. I have a little stand-in with the captain of this boat."

He rose, but she laid a detaining hand on his arm. "You really mustn't! I"—

"Now, see here," he said frankly, "you're calling yourself all sorts of things because we haven't been introduced. It's all nonsense, don't you know. We were bound to meet after the conventional fashion some day. Something—er—tells me so."

It may have been that Margaret wanted to get out in the fresh air or it may have been because she felt it her duty to change the expression in his eyes which were looking at her so eagerly. He strode down to the purser's room and paid the price of the best stateroom on the boat, which gave them access to a tiny patch of deck room shut in on the other side by a lifeboat, a stack of life preservers and a most uncompromising railing. From this point Margaret viewed the beautiful panorama of the Palisades, and the young man, loyal New Yorker that he was, insisted that it was purely his duty to make his state show up at its best.

The last ten or fifteen minutes of the trip were uncomfortable ones for Margaret. Mrs. Grundy whispered in one ear that she had already been indiscreet, and it was her duty to drop the young man forever. Her sense of fairness whispered in the other ear that she owed him something for his courtesy.

As they gathered up their traps to disembark it was quite evident that the young man was not giving himself any anxiety over the situation. He took her checks. He even accepted Pedro as a matter of course. He led the way to a hansom without asking her so much as where she was going. When she and Pedro were settled in the vehicle the young man stood with one foot on the step.

"Will you tell him to take me to the Grand Central?" she asked.

"I have already done so," said the young man placidly, and, without hesitation, he sprang into the hansom and sat down beside her.

Margaret was speechless, not sure whether she was glad or sorry. Was the young man trying to kidnap her, or was he a mind reader? She was certain she had dropped no hint as to her destination.

"You see, I knew you all the time. You are Margaret Trenton, and you are on your way to visit Etta Wilson at Rye Beach. I saw your name on your luggage."

Margaret looked at him in wonder.

"Yes, but Etta! How do you know Etta?"

"Oh, she's my cousin! It was you I was looking for all the time. She had asked me to meet you on the boat if I happened to be coming down at the same time from the Merriam house party. I very nearly missed you because — because — well — that picture doesn't do you justise."

"Oh!" said Margaret, feeling somehow that there was nothing else to be said.

"I was going on to Newport for a week, but I think I'll stop off at Rye." Margaret's glance fell, and a slight flush spread over her face. The young man's lips twitched.

"I think you need me there—to let you know whether your hat is on straight."

Then they both looked at each other and laughed, and Pedro, in sympathy, pounded the floor of the hansom with his tail. It is so good to be young.

Out of the Mouth, Etc.

The Sunday school teacher was telling her scholars about the fall of Jericho.

"And the people marched around and around," she said, "singing songs and blowing trumpets, until all of a sudden down came the walls and"—

"If they sung like my sister does," interrupted the littlest chap, "it ain't no wonder they fell down."—Lippincott's Magazine.

WOMAN OF THE NORTH.

Mrs. Lundquist's Wonderful Breaking of All Women's Records for Travel.

The Dawson News tells an interesting story of a courageous woman of the northland:

The Hannah, one of the strangest craft that ever made their way down the Yukon, arrived in Dawson on July 8, 1904, in charge of Mrs. H. C. Lundquist, woman skipper, master, owner and general director. The craft is a diminutive scow, carrying besides the master her little daughter, Elmira, and one man, Carl Swanson, as a crew. The party was bound for Rampart with the intention of eventually landing in Tanana.

Two cows, a calf, three dogs and feed for the animals and supplies for the people aboard make up the freight. The entire outfit is under bond, and will be allowed to pass into American territory free of duty. "Captain" Lundquist has been spending the last several months in Skagway. During the summer she will sell milk at Rampart and Tanana, and in the winter fatten her live stock for the butcher's block.

Mrs. Lundquist is one of the admirable, rugged specimens of womanhood of which old Scandinavia and the new north of this continent boast as a type that does deeds of outdoor heroism and endurance as well as maintaining the accomplishments of life more strictly domestic.

Last winter Mrs. Lundquist broke all records of the world for travel single-handed and alone by a woman in the Arctic regions in the dead of winter. She mushed from Rampart to Whitehorse every foot of the way with her own team, and oftentimes was out when it was 50 to 60 below zero, and it was declared by the miners that during some of the time she was on the trail the thermometer was down to 70 below. The total distance from Rampart to Whitehorse is 1,450 miles. Road houses can be made nightly over the greater part of this route, but on the Rampart-Tanana stretch and on the Circle-Dawson stretch they were not always convenient at nightfall, and several times the traveler camped out alone, sleeping wrapped in her great Arctic dog robes, and with only the thin wall of a diminutive tent stretched between her and the sombre, leaden sky.

At the outset of the trip fourteen were in the party, but they scattered after a time, and as each traveler had his own dog team, and had to manage it, virtually the woman was then traveling alone. After leaving Fairbanks mushers were met by chance at times, but she did not delay if there was no one else with whom to travel. At times the dense fog caused by the extreme cold made it impossible to see ahead of the teams, and the trail was so dim the woman had to tramp before her dogs and break the way. Most of the time it was too cold to ride, and she ran the greater part of the great journey by holding to the handlebars of the sleigh.

On arriving at Whitehorse Mrs. Lundquist had lost twelve pounds from her weight at the start at Rampart, but was in excellent spirits and health, and could have turned back for another long jaunt. The run from Fairbanks to Dawson was made in twenty-six days, and from Dawson to Whitehorse in eleven days. The average daily distance covered was twenty-five miles. The longest distance made in one day was thirty-five miles.

Mrs. Lundquist so values two of her fine malamute dogs with which she made the trip that she refuses to sell them for any sum, and is taking them back to Rampart and Tanana this trip. Mrs. Lundquist is a woman of middle age, robust and hardy, and a distinct type of the daughter of blue-eyed, fair-haired Norse peoples who have done so much to develop the Yukon. The little daughter is a picture of her mother, and is now entering the interior of Alaska for the first time.

Opposed to Militarism.

Col. Sam Hughes, speaking on Imperial defences before the Empire Club in Toronto recently, declared that a partnership union between Great Britain and her colonies in the matter of co-operative defence, vitalized by purely democratic principles, would add untold strength to the Empire in minimizing her cost of defences and creating an indissoluble bond of sympathy. Each component part of the greater Britain would be interested in the other parts. Thousands of positions in the army, navy and civil service would be thrown open to young Canadians and a vast sphere of usefulness thus created for them. He heartily endorsed Hon. S. H. Blake's denunciation of rampant militarism. A well-planned militia system for Canada was, however, the exact antithesis of this spirit. Mr Blake's opinion did not preclude Canada's having a defensive system of her own when he said Canada should bear no part in sustaining Great Britain's defence. No nation that had any commerce to defend or reputation to uphold should fail to contribute towards the support of a navy. Canada was the only nation that was not paying one dollar for the defence of her shipping and was hanging unabashed to the skirts of Great Britain.

A Million Acres Reclaimed.

The chief work in reclamation by irrigation has been in the Lethbridge district, N.W.T., where the task of reclaiming a million acres of land to intensive agriculture has been undertaken and is already partially accomplished. Ten thousand contented settlers have been located on irrigable lands. The grain output for the season passes the million mark; the sugar business has been established with an output of three-quarters of a million pounds last year and three and a quarter million this year, and the country is being brought into the thrall of a decided and vigorous industrialism and commercial life. A new feature and a new significance in connection with agricultural lands have arisen with the advent of irrigation in Canada.

In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

HIS WILL ON BIRCH BARK.

UNIQUE LAST TESTAMENT OF A DYING MINER.

Vancouver, B. C., March 30.—Unique was the last will of Robert McNeill, whose life has just ended far away in the frozen north, at the headwaters of the Stewart River. On a piece of birch bark he, by the light of a tiny oil taper, scrawled a last message to his loved ones, bequeathing to them the wealth he had made in toilsome years of prospecting and mining.

Viola and Freda Finn, of Spokane, Was., daughters of a deceased sister, are the ones to whom the dying man left his property. The birch bark statement is in the hands of William Rice, a Stewart River prospector. Henry J. Ross, who journeyed from the graveside to bring out news of the death of McNeill, says McNeill's estate chiefly consists of valuable claims on the river in a rich locality, and may turn out to be worth thousands.

Ross says, "About two months ago McNeill and Rice left Dawson for the Stewart River. They had just begun to work some promising claims when McNeill was taken ill. I came across them camped in the snow. It was only a few hours before McNeill died. He said he wished to leave his property to his nieces, and asked me to hunt them up. We had no paper, so the sick man wrote his will on a piece of bark and Rice and I signed as witnesses. McNeill died that night, and we buried him in the snow."

Strange to say, the father of the two girls died in the north also. He went there at the outbreak of the Klondike excitement and lost his life in a snowslide while trying to cross one of the passes.

TROTTING.

Will Pacer Supplant Trotter?

The Year Book for 1904 lists 222 trotters that have taken records of 2.10 or better, and 611 pacers with marks of 2.10 or better. In other words, the side-wheelers outnumbered the fast performers at the diagonal gait nearly three to one. Nothing more clearly sets forth the marvellous increase in the number of performers at the lateral gait, and while the 2.10 trotters seem to come along in goodly numbers, the figures can be taken as excellent support for the belief of a great many people that eventually the trotter will be supplanted by the pacer.

Whether that contingency, if it ever arises, can be attributed to the greater potency of the pacing gait or to the mere fact that it is easier to make a fast pacer out of a harness horse than it is to make him trot fast, need not be discussed here.

Further figures from the Year Book show that the total number of standard trotters to the close of 1904 is 20,282, of standard pacers 11,748, whereas ten years ago the figures were 10,539 for trotters, 2,606 for pacers. In the decade the trotters gained 9,743, the pacers 9,142. But the per cent. of gain, while less than 100 for the trotters, was almost 400 for the pacers. Of 2.10 trotters there were 31 at the close of the racing season of 1894; of 2.10, 57. In the intervening ten years the trotters gained 191, the pacers 554, which is over 600 per cent. for the trotters, and over 1,000 per cent. for the pacers. That certainly makes it look as if the pacers were pushing the trotters into the background.

More interesting still, as a sidelight on the subject, is the relative strength of the trotters and pacers at the close of 1891, the last full year of the high-wheel sulky. The 2.12 list then contained a total of 13 trotters, of which Sunol, 2.08 1-4, was the best, and 14 pacers, with Direct, 2.06, the leader. During the high-wheel era the 2.10 trotters outnumbered the 2.10 pacers seven to five, and the 2.12 pacers had the narrow margin of but one over the 2.12 trotters. Is it possible that the lighter running racing sulky must be held responsible for the phenomenal increase in the number of fast pacers? Something has done it, and if the gain continues, every race meeting will of necessity have more classes for pacers than for trotters. There are now sixty-one pacers in the 2.05 list, while but ten trotters have done as well. In the high-wheel days the fastest trotting record was 2 1-4 seconds slower than the fastest pacing record; to-day it is 2 1-2 seconds slower, thanks to the chopping off of a quarter of a second from the pacing record by Dan Patch last year. Casting aside the so-called wind shield records, the difference between the best pacing and best trotting record is three seconds. Evidently the pacer has not only come to stay, but, like the Japanese army in Manchuria, has come to take possession.

HUNTING.

More Protection for Deer.

A correspondent signing himself "Old Hunter" has the following communication in the Mail and Empire re more protection for deer:

Sir,—Now that there has been a change of Government in Ontario, it is to be hoped that the Game Act, as far as deer are concerned, will be amended. The annual slaughter is far too great, and unless it is checked, the practical extermination of the deer will be only a matter of a few years.

The fact that, so far, there has been no decrease in the number killed annually is used as an argument to prove that the deer are holding their own. The explanation is the great increase in the number of hunters and their yearly invasion of new ground. I have hunted during a good many seasons, and have had to change my ground repeatedly on account of the thinning out of the game. Others have had the same experience.

Some sportsmen propose that there should be a close season of several years. This would be of little use if the present regulations were to be continued at the end of such close season. In my opinion, the Government should prohibit the killing of fawns and does at all times. There is no sport in killing fawns, and little in killing does. I do not think that any sportsman will object to my proposal, whatever, those who sell their venison, and who go into the woods to kill their two deer each, large or small, any way they can get them, on land or in the water, may think of it.

I would go further. I would like to see hounding prohibited. I am aware that many sportsmen, properly so-called, who have always been accustomed to use dogs, and who delight in their music, will object to this. My practice has been the same as theirs, and I can sympathize with them; but that does not affect my conviction that if the deer are to be preserved hounding must be stopped. I am also aware that the chief gamewarden has expressed the opinion that general still-hunting would lead to shooting accidents, but I believe that the adoption of my first proposition would remove this objection. If the hunters had to look for bucks' horns before shooting, men would not be mistaken for deer. The open season, too, might be lengthened a little, so that all the hunters would not have to crowd into the woods at the same time, as at present. This would further reduce the possibility of mistakes and accidents.

Settlers should be compelled to obey the law better than they have been in the habit of doing. In unorganized townships they are allowed to kill deer for their own use, but they have been in the habit of abusing this privilege by killing and selling deer to unsuccessful hunters. I believe that fully 25 per cent. of the deer which are brought out of the northern woods are obtained from settlers. This should be stopped, if for nothing more than to put an end to the lying to which it leads on the part of the mighty hunters who pass off their purchases as the result of their own prowess.

All the money received by the Government from the sale of hunters' licenses should be expended for game protection. I do not think this has been the practice in the past, but we are looking for better things from the Whitney Government.

HOCKEY.

Money in Professionalism.

The Montreal Critic says: The Montreal boys who played hockey in the International League during the past winter saved money. By the nature of their contract they were compelled to be temperate, and the people of the mining town did not permit them to spend much money on board or other incidentals. The result was that the hockeyists were able to save the greater part of their salaries. One of them saved $400 in 14 weeks and besides accumulating this pile in the bank spent a most enjoyable winter. It is little wonder that Canadian boys are keen on playing in the professional league. In this respect they are much more to be admired for announcing right out from the chest that they are playing for money, than are those who stay at home and quietly but firmly insist on getting their price for playing what is alleged to be amateur hockey.

THE TURF.

World's Greatest Steeplechase Run To-day.

The Liverpool Grand National, run to-day, is the "blue ribbon" steeplechase of the world, and the horse who can negotiate it must have speed, strength and stamina, besides being a fencer of great power. The entire course is 4 miles 856 yards—that is, twice around a pear-shaped track. All through the track is a turf one, and almost a dead level, with a gradual rise toward the finish. Up to a couple of years ago the horses had to run through a ploughed field at one place, but this has been eliminated.

In one round of the course there are 16 jumps, and two which are directly in front of the grand stand are avoided the second time in the run home, so that in all the horses have to clear 30 jumps. The two in front of the stand are the water jumps, 16 feet wide, and the other a ditch and fence.

The individual description and measurement of the fences are as follows, the first fence being taken with its number the second time around:

1 and 17—Thorn fence, 5 feet 3 inches high and 2 feet thick.

2 and 18—Thorn fence, 5 feet high, guard rail on the take-off side 2 feet high, close up against the fence.

3 and 19—Thorn fence, 4 feet 10 inches high, with ditch on the take-off side, 7 feet wide and 4 feet deep, with a rail in front of this ditch 2 feet high.

4 and 20—Rail and fence, the rail being 3 feet high and the fence 5 feet 3 inches high.

5 and 21—Thorn fence, 5 feet high and 2 feet thick.

6 and 22 — Known as "Beecher's Brook," a thick thorn fence 5 feet 4 inches high, with a rail 3 feet high in front, and a natural ditch 9 feet wide and 4 feet deep on the far side.

7 and 23—Thorn fence, 5 feet high, with rail 2 feet 6 inches in front.

8 and 24—Thorn fence, 5 feet high, with a ditch on the take-off side 6 feet wide, and in front of this a rail 3 feet high.

9 and 25 — Known as "Valentine's Brook," a thorn fence 4 feet 10 inches high, with a rail in front 3 feet high, and a brook 10 feet wide on the far side.

10 and 26 — Thorn fence, 5 feet 3 inches high and 2 feet thick.

11 and 27 — A rail 3 feet high, a ditch 8 feet wide and 4 feet deep, and a thorn fence 4 feet 8 inches high.

12 and 28—Rail 2 feet 6 inches, a fence 5 feet 4 inches high, and a ditch 7 feet wide on the far side.

13 and 29—A thorn fence, 4 feet 10 inches high.

14 and 30—A thorn fence, 5 feet 4 inches high.

15—A thorn fence, 5 feet high and 2 feet thick, a ditch on the take off side 6 feet wide, and a rail in front 3 feet high.

16—The "water jump," 16 feet wide.

The best record for the course is 9 minutes 42 3-5 seconds, by Cloister in 1893, and carrying the top weight of 175 pounds. In 1899 Manifesto, with the same weight up, did it in 9 minutes 48 4-5 seconds, and this performance was regarded as better than Cloister's, as the ground was covered with snow.

These records reveal some very interesting comparisons in speed. During the last twenty years or so the average time of the Derby is about 2 minutes and 47 seconds for the mile and a half, and during the same period the average time of the Grand National about 10 minutes for a long and tiring four and a half miles. Then the Derby horse carries 126 pounds, while the average of the Grand National horse is 156 pounds.

He Was a Married Man.

London Tit-Bits tells of a Scottish singer named Wilson, who was being trained for professional work, sang a love song with exquisite quality of voice, but insufficient passion and expression. His teacher told him he must put more feeling into it and sing as if he was really in love.

"Eh, man," he replied, "hoo can I do that, and me a marriet man?"

ANOTHER LARGE CROWD IN CITY HALL LAST NIGHT.

GOODLY SUM WILL BE REALIZED BY W.C.A. AS RESULT OF TWO ENTERTAINMENTS.

As the result of the two entertainments held in the City Hall in aid of the Hospital, a goodly sum was realized for that purpose. The ladies of the Woman's Christian Association, under whose auspices the affair was held, spared no pains to make the entertainments both pleasing and profitable, and their labors were not in vain.

Last night the attendance was in excess of the previous evening, and all present appeared to be thoroughly enjoying themselves. The various booths were liberally patronized, whilst not a few parted with their coin in order to see the X-ray machine demonstrated. The orchestra was present, discoursing sweet strains at intervals during the evening.

The programme for the evening was given by the young ladies of Albert College, who are members of the gymnasium classes. It consisted of dumbbell exercises, which showed excellent training; fancy marches, statue posing, wand twisting, a scarf fantasy, etc. The young ladies performed in a most edifying and pleasing way, and deserved the applause which was accorded them. The statue posing was exceptionally fine, colored lights being used.

Those who took part in the various numbers on the programme were as follows:

Dumb Bell Drill. — Misses Easton, Graham, Wood, Pettingill, Hunter, Anderson, Reid, Metzler, J. Johnson, Sculthorpe, Caldwell and Potter.

Wand Twists. — Misses Thorne, S. Wiggins, Robinson, M. Wiggins, Pettingill, Hunter, Ketcheson, McQuay and Wood.

Scarf Fantasy.—Misses F. Webster, L. Johnson, Caldwell, McQuay, Pettingill, S. Wiggins, L. Potter, Morgan and M. Jones.

Fancy March. — Misses Sexsmith, Isteed, L. McConnell, Graham, Drinkwater, Brereton, Ketcheson, M. Wiggins, Robinson, Sculthorpe, Dyer, Easton, Reid, Shay, M. Jones and Morgan.

Pantomine. — Misses D. Caldwell, Anderson, N. Vandewater, F. Webster, Ketcheson and Metzler.

The statue posing young ladies were Misses McConnell, Drinkwater and Brereton, and their representations were as follows: Hylas and the Nymphs, Sacrifice of Iphigenia, The Graces, Niobe's Last Woe, L'Allegro, The Fates, Resurrection Morn.

In conversation with some of the ladies this morning The Intelligencer learned that at present the proceeds are not exactly known, but they will amount to a goodly sum, if they do not entirely reach the amount aimed at, namely, $500.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DOROTHY VERNON."

That Miss Bertha Galland, who appears at the Carman opera house tomorrow evening, is scoring a decided success wherever she appears is again evidenced by the following, taken from the Quebec Chronicle of Tuesday last, where the company is playing a three nights' engagement. The paper says:

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall is an interesting novel. Turned into a drama in four acts, by Mr. Paul Kester, it is equally interesting, and strong, as a romantic picture, in which love and adventure play their parts, when the rival Queens, Mary of Scotland, and Elizabeth of England, held sway. The piece was artistically staged at the Auditorium last night. The scenery was new and striking, and while Miss Bertha Galland was the chief attraction, her support was good and everyone heartily enjoyed a performance which appealed at once to the heart as well as to the intellect. Miss Galland, from whom much was expected, in no wise disappointed her audience. She possesses a striking stage presence, a voice which sounds on the ear, a manner which captivates, and an expression of feature which varies with the moods for which her role calls. It is no exaggeration to say that our people have seldom had the opportunity of seeing so gifted an actress, as the lady who so charmingly and winsomely presented the character of Dorothy Vernon last night. Her interpretation of the part was well conceived. In every line that she spoke, in every movement that she made, her art was evident. She dressed becomingly, and her pathos was as touching as her humor was infectious."

"DORA THORNE."

"Dora Thorne," in its dramatic form, is one of the treats in store for the popular-priced play houses this season. Like the book, the play is highly sentimental, and has much room for applause. The piece is well staged, a novel and beautiful effect being seen in the fourth act in the illuminated gardens of Earle Manor. Prominent in the cast are Miss Cuba Niblo, in the name part; Miss Isabel Sherman, Miss Graber, Messrs. Leon McReynolds, George C. Denton and many others, carefully chosen for their respective roles. The fortunes of the little country girl "Dora" are followed with intense interest, and a female villian, deep-dyed in villany under the cloak of friendship, causes all kinds of trouble and excitement. "Dora Thorne" will be seen at the Carman on Monday, April 3.

INSPECTOR HOWIE IN THE CITY TO-DAY.

FIRE BRIGADE AND WATER SERVICE INSPECTED — AN EXCELLENT SHOWING.

Mr. R. Howie, of Toronto, Inspector of the Underwriters' Association, was in the city to-day and this morning called out the Fire Brigade. His object was to ascertain the water pressure and see what position the city would be in should a fire break out. Lines of hose were attached to four hydrants on Front St. and streams turned on simultaneously. The result was most satisfactory as excellent streams were thrown from each lead, the pressure being good.

HAIR CAUGHT IN LOOM.

PETERBORO GIRL HAD A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE—HER LIFE SAVED BY BELT COMING OFF.

Peterboro Review: Miss Minnie Wilkins, daughter of Mr. John J. Wilkins, 617 Bethune St., an employee of the Colonial Weaving Company, had an experience on Tuesday which she will not soon forget

She operates a loom at that factory. Tuesday, in some manner her hair became caught in the machinery and was almost pulled out before the belt came off and the unfortunate girl was released. Her screams could be heard in all parts of the mill and she must have suffered great pain. Witnesses of the accident state that if the belt had not come off, the girl would doubtless have been killed, as her scalp would have been torn off or her back broken. It was a very narrow escape and although her head is very painful yet, spectators of the mishap say that she should be thankful she is alive after such an experience.

Her head is causing her much pain at present and some of her hair was torn out by the machine. It is expected that she will entirely recover from the effects of the injury, and shock to her nervous system, in a few days.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

An apparently authoritative statement is made by the St. Petersburg correspondent of The London Times that peace negotiations between Russia and Japan are already in progress, that President Roosevelt has been selected as mediator, and that a suspension of hostilities may be expected shortly. Coupled with this is the statement, however, that Russia cannot accept conditions which call for either the payment of a war indemnity or the cession of territory to Japan. Yet according to all public advices from Japan these two points are just the ones on which she will strenuously insist. Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister at London, in an interview yesterday, states that a cession of territory and indemnity are the only points negotiable, while M. Takahashi, the Japanese financial commissioner at London, says that as war was forced upon Japan it is not likely that she will waive the right to an indemnity and cession of territory when peace is concluded. The Times correspondent believes that the Russian Government will have to call a national assembly to decide the question of peace or war.

Assuming that the war will go on, an approximate estimate of the forces in the field will prove interesting. According to a statement published in a Japanese paper, the estimate made by the General Staff at Tokio of the Russian strength in the Far East just before the recent battles, including the railway guards in Siberia, was 511,000 men, with 1,406 field guns. It was stated some time ago that the number of men permanently stationed along the line of the Siberian and Manchurian railways was about 93,000; the garrison of Vladivostok was increased to 30,000 men, with a force of some 8,000 more distributed along the coast toward the Corean frontier and on the Tumen River, with headquarters on Possiet Bay. An army corps that may be estimated at another 30,000 men was in reserve at Harbin.

Assuming, therefore, that the Japanese estimate was accurate, as it probably was, owing to their exceptional means of obtaining information, the number of troops of all arms with which Kuropatkin had to hold his central position on the Shaho and along a line of nearly ninety miles of front, besides guarding his flanks, was reduced to 350,000 men.

Opposed to this number the Japanese General had a force that cannot have been less than 500,000 strong, with field artillery that was not less numerous than the Russian, and his guns of position more numerous and a great deal more powerful.

The Russian losses during the entire war, by land and sea, allowing the loss at the battle of Mukden to have been 200,000, reach the enormous total of 397,000. Deducting the 200,000 lost, the Russians would still have a force of 341,000 men scattered along the line of railway, at Harbin and Vladivostok, and guarding lines of communication, apart from the reinforcements that are arriving. The Siberian Railway cannot carry more than 35,000 men, with their supplies, in a month.

The Japanese losses at Mukden are given at 57,000, but they are in an entirely different position from the Russians. They are near their base of supplies, have free and uninterrupted communications, and Japan can practically place all the men she requires in the field. Allowing that Russia's railway communication west of Harbin will not be cut, and that she can still continue to bring forward reinforcements, and reducing the result to mere numbers, what possible chance has she now against Japan?—The Globe.

WATERS

NO CREDIT IS DUE ROSS.

Made No Effort One Way or the Other to Get More Territory for Ontario.

Toronto, March 31.—In the Legislature yesterday, Mr. Pattinson (South Waterloo) resumed the debate on the address, making a splendid first effort.

Mr. Harcourt, temporary leader of the Opposition, closed the debate for his side, occupying over an hour. The House laughed at him when he declared the Government would remain in power just as long and no longer than it followed in the footsteps of its predecessors.

Important Declarations.

Premier Whitney's closing speech in the debate on the address was fruitful of two important declarations. One was a positive statement that the Government of Mr. Ross had made no move, verbal or written, to open negotiations with the Dominion Government with reference to a division of the territory of Keewatin. The speech from the Throne contained a reference to the opening of such negotiations by the present Government, but Mr. Harcourt, temporary leader of the Opposition, lost no time in putting on the order paper a notice of motion indicating that there would be found on the fyles copies of correspondence between Mr. Ross and the Dominion Government on the subject, and Mr. Preston in his speech followed this up by declaring that the credit for the move in the direction of expansion should be given to the old regime. Mr. Whitney said he could find no correspondence; furthermore, he held in his hand a telegram containing proof that the old Government had not mentioned the subject to Premier Laurier. This telegram was from Sir Wilfrid himself, but Mr. Whitney did not say so.

Will Enforce License Laws.

The other important statement from Mr. Whitney was that the new Government would fearlessly enforce the license laws, and that any inspector or commissioner who failed to carry out the instructions of the Government would be summarily dismissed.

In conclusion Mr. Whitney said they welcomed criticism because it was necessary to pure and honest Government, and the first thing that the people wanted was clean Government. When the time arrived that they were unworthy of confidence they would cheerfully submit, because they believed that the servant who is loyal to the public will be fairly dealt with by their masters.

Estimates and Public Accounts.

Mr. Harcourt asked the treasurer what progress had been made in the preparation of the public accounts and estimates.

Hon. Col. Matheson replied that the public accounts would be down on the morrow. There had been some difficulty in getting the estimates through council owing to the pressure of other business, but possibly they would be ready by Thursday.

Hon. Col. Matheson presented the report of the special committee appointed to select the standing committees.

Read a First Time.

The following bills were read a first time:

Mr. Hoyle—To amend the Ontario Companies' Act.

Mr. Preston (Brant)—Respecting convict-made goods.

The Railway Taxation Commission will hold its final meeting on Saturday morning. The report has been prepared ready for signatures.

Deputations from Addington, Frontenac and Nipissing saw the Minister of Public Works yesterday. A suggestion was made that the regulations be changed placing colonization roads under commissioners.

A. G. MacKay Victim of Trolley.

A. G. MacKay, M. P. P., for North Grey and Minister of Crown Lands in the last Ross Cabinet, was the victim of a trolley accident at 9.40 last night. He was unconscious for about 20 minutes and sustained a nasty scalp wound. Those who picked him from the pavement at first thought he had been killed. It was while driving across Yonge street, at Grosvenor, that Mr. MacKay's carriage became entangled in the movements of two trolleys, north and southbound. The car going north struck the carriage and upset it, and Mr. MacKay was thrown to the asphalt roadway. Dr. Hargreaves attended to the injured man, who afterwards left in the company of friends for his rooms at the Rossin House, where it was stated that his injuries were not serious.

Tenth and Last.

Toronto, March 31.—A. C. Pratt, M. P. P., has filed a cross-petition in the South Norfolk election against his opponent, W. A. Charlton. The time for filing protests has expired. There are now 10 constituencies protested, with cross-petitions in three.

Want Canada Embargo Removed.

London, March 31.—(C. A. P.)—A largely-attended meeting of agriculturists belonging to the northern counties was held yesterday at Inverness to consider steps to be taken to secure the removal of restrictions against the importation of Canadian cattle. The chairman proposed that they form themselves into an association for securing the removal of restrictions, and this was agreed to. The members of Parliament representing the northern counties and the Inverness district of burghs will be called upon to support any motion introduced in the House in support of this object.

Gen. Benson Dined.

St. Catharines, March 31.—Last evening a number of friends here gave a complimentary dinner at the new Murray House to Gen. F. W. Benson, C. B., chief of the remount department of the British War Office, who is paying a visit to his native city. There were only two toasts, "The King" and "Our Guest," and Gen. Benson replied to the latter. Gen. Benson is a veteran of '66 and wears the medal he received for service with the 19th St. Catharines Regiment. He was a son of the late Senator Benson, who represented this county. Gen. Benson is in Canada on official business.

Gen. McMullen Dies.

Montreal, March 31.—A well-known citizen and soldier of the American republic died here yesterday, in the person of Gen. Edgar McMullen. He was president of the Ottawa Valley Electric Railway. It was Mr. McMullen's brigade that saved the day for Union in the field of Gettysburg. Gen. McMullen came to Montreal at the end of the war and established the Adams Tobacco Co.

Victorian Not Sighted.

Halifax, N. S., March 31.—At midnight the turbine steamer Victorian had not been sighted. All day long hundreds have been visiting the wharves in anticipation of her arrival. Hugh Allan gave out that she was not due until 7 last evening, but the great fields of ice compelled her to take the southern course, which would make her 12 hours later.

Fire at Elmira Reformatory.

Elmira, N. Y., March 31.—The fire at Elmira Reformatory Wednesday night totally destroyed the tailor shop, storehouse, laundry, bathroom, number 1 engine-room, shoe shop, bookbindery, upholstery, blacksmith shop, photograph gallery and broom shop and entailed a loss of $75,000.

McINTOSH BROS.

IMPORTANCE OF THE FIRST STEP

Dyspeptics Should Begin Right by Using Smith's Triple Cure.

The first point in the treatment of dyspepsia is to remove the cause—to cure the catarrh which causes the dyspeptic condition. When your stomach is strained from overwork, when you eat too much and too often, you must provide relief by removing the burden. Chronic dyspepsia or indigestion in the majority of cases is due to catarrh of the stomach. Smith's Triple Cure cures dyspepsia because it cures catarrh wherever located. Its use is the first step toward a cure. Begin right by first removing the cause. Smith's Triple Cure will always do this because it takes off the strain; it puts the stomach and digestive organs in a healthy condition. It cleans the mucous membranes and keeps them healthy, so that catarrh cannot exist or find lodgment. The mucous membranes protect the interior of the body just as the skin protects the outside. As long as the mucous membranes are healthy and clean everything works right—digestion and assimilation are normal. Now, suppose the mucous membranes become congested, ulcerated, cankered and covered with foul secretions. You know the gastric glands and functions would soon become diseased. Catarrh and dyspepsia would soon rob your system of vigor and your nerves of strength. Now use Smith's Triple Cure and note the change. The mucous membranes soon lose their congested, angry and thickened appearance and the ulcers and canker heal. That's the first step toward curing dyspepsia and catarrh. Smith's Triple Cure will do this for a dyspeptic or catarrhal stomach, will remove the cause, make the digestion natural and healthy, enrich the blood and establish harmonious action of the digestive organs. All dealers sell Smith's Triple Cure, price 50 cents, each package a full two weeks' treatment, containing four separate preparations, the greatest value for the money ever offered. If your druggist won't supply you, send us 25 two-cent stamps and we will send it postpaid and guarantee safe delivery. Address W. F. Smith Co., 185 St. James St., Montreal.

BOTH CALL ROOSEVELT

Peace Negotiations On Between Russia and Japan.

May Proclaim an Armistice—But the National Assembly is Likely to Decide on War or Peace—Pourparlers Are Being Conducted on the Understanding That Russia Will Cede Neither Territory Nor Pay Indemnity

London, March 31.—The correspondent at St. Petersburg of The Times cables:—"My repeated announcements of the proximity of peace are confirmed to-day by information from unimpeachable sources, showing that Russia and Japan have selected President Roosevelt as a mediator, that negotiations are already in progress, and that the suspension of hostilities may be shortly expected.

"The Russian Government this morning issued a categorical denial of the reports published abroad that it had formulated conditions upon which it would be possible to conclude peace. This is literally and technically true, but I can assert upon the best authority that Russia has stated the conditions that she cannot accept, namely, a war indemnity and the cession of territory.

"The decision upon this point was reached at a private council at Tzarskoe-Selo, attended by Count Lamsdorff and M. Witte. The council was the result of a meeting of the Advisory Council of War, consisting of Generals Crodekoff and Komoroff, under the presidency of Grand Duke Nicholas Nicolaivitch, which, being requested by the Emperor to report upon the prospects of the war, declared that a successful issue was not to be expected.

"Count Lamsdorff communicated what may be called Russia's negative proposals to the French Government a day or two ago. To France, indeed, belongs the credit of prompting her ally to enter into peace negotiations, and, in spite of the indignant outcry of several Russian newspapers, there is no denying the powerful influence of the peace campaign opened in the French press following the failure of the French loan.

"The Russians, of course, are still unaware of the commencement of peace negotiations, but, notwithstanding the official denial published this morning, and the boastful assertion of the war party, the conviction that peace is near is steadily growing. It would, however, be presumptuous to expect an early conclusion of any treaty. It is the opinion of the highest and most influential Russians that the question of peace is altogether dependent upon internal conditions.

"If the unrest grows peace may be hastened, but if contrary to general expectation, the disorders subside, the negotiations at Washington will likely be retarded. If, again, as is most likely, the Japanese demands prove incompatible with dynastic considerations, the Government will have to resort to a National Assembly to decide the question of peace or war. Personally, I believe this is the only rational solution. It is rumored to-day that the manifesto convening the Zemski Sobor will be issued on April 7th, on which date falls the festival of the Annunciation.

"Diplomatic circles express the greatest praise for Count Lamsdorff's astuteness in opening the negotiations with a statement of the negative conditions, as thereby he reserves a field for compromise. For instance, should the Japanese insist upon an indemnity Russia may be able to offer to retrocede the southern portion of Sakhalien.

"It is believed that Russia is preparing to draft troops to the Siberian frontier, and keep Admiral Rojestvensky cruising in eastern waters so as to demonstrate her readiness and ability to prolong the campaign. The selection of President Roosevelt as a mediator, which was due to Japanese initiative, is regarded here as evidence of the excellent discrimination of the Japanese, who thereby secure a firm friend, who at the same time will make it a point of honor to bring the negotiations to a successful close, and who, therefore, is not likely to have accepted the difficult post of mediator if the Japanese intended to present exorbitant demands."

Sure He Saw Torpedo Boats.

Paris, March 31.—Admiral Rojestvensky received a telegraphic summary of the decision of the international commission of inquiry into the North Sea incident, and said, in an authorized interview with The Matin correspondent at Nossa-Be, March 4: "I am glad the admirals approved of my conduct, but owing to doubts concerning the incident I shall always feel a certain measure of moral responsibility. However, torpedo boats were certainly there, my ships were endangered, I was obliged to save the flagship and I succeeded."

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock at the City Cattle Market, as reported by the two railways since Tuesday last, were 77 car loads, composed of 1155 cattle, 2000 hogs, 160 sheep and lambs, with about 120 calves.

There was an excellent demand for shipping cattle at firmer prices. The reasons for this are that several of the dealers had space to fill and prices were higher at Chicago, where some of these same dealers have been in the habit of getting their supplies. One dealer stated that he expected to lose from $8 to $10 per head on all the cattle he had bought, unless the British markets should advance. Prices for export steers ranged from $4.00 to $5.30 per cwt., but the latter price was paid for one load only, which were bought off cars, unfed and unwatered, which is equal to 15c per cwt. less. The bulk of the exporters sold at $4.75 to $5 per cwt. Bulls at $3.50 to $4.15.

Butchers' cattle sold readily at firm quotations, which, when quality is taken into consideration, were higher than for some time. The main reason for this was that prices were higher in Montreal and outside points. There was about a dozen outside buyers, six of whom came from Montreal. Picked lots sold from $4.40 to $4.60 and for one or two lots a little more was paid. Loads of good sold at $4.15 to $4.30; fair to good at $3.90 to $4.15; medium, at $3.50 to $3.80; common, at $3 to $3.30; inferior, at $2.50 to $2.70 per cwt.

Short-keep feeders, 1150 to 1250 lbs. each, are in excellent demand, and many farmers as well as dealers, went short of getting a supply. Prices for steers, 1150 to 1250 lbs. each, ranged from $4.50 to $4.75 per cwt.; steers, 1000 to 1100 lbs. each, $4 to $4.25; steers, 800 to 1000 lbs. each, at $2.80 to $4 per cwt.; stockers, at $3.25 to $3.75 per cwt.

About 20 milch cows and springers, for which there was a fair demand, sold at $30 to $55 each.

About 100 veal calves were offered for sale, the bulk of which should be in the farmer's stable. But prices for butter are high, as well as for veal calves, and this is one of the reasons for so many inferior "bobs" being offered. Prices for calves ranged from $2 to $12 each, and $3.50 to $6.25 per cwt. A real choice well-fed new milk calf would bring $6.50 to $7 per cwt.

The run of sheep and yearling lambs was again short of the demand and prices were again firmer. Export ewes sold at $4.75 to $5.50 per cwt.; bucks, $4 to $4.25 per cwt.; choice yearling lambs, $6.75 to $7.25 per cwt., and one load at a little more money, the price not being made public.

Receipts of hogs since Tuesday were about 2000, which were bought by Mr. Harris, who stated that the market was steady. Selects are quoted at $6.25 and lights and fats at $6 per cwt., for fed and watered.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

ABOUT "BLOOD BITTERS" AND "TONICS."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of 'tonics,' 'pills' and 'cathartics,' which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both; they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.
